DENBIGH

A very interesting wedding took place in the Lutheran church, on the afternoon of the 26th inst., when Miss Freda Both, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Both, was united in marriage by Rev. M. Voss, of Eganville, to Henry William Kuehl, of Killaloe, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. The bride was attended by Miss Annie Stein, and the bride's brother, John, acted as best man. Among the guests from distant parts were the groom's parents, from Killaloe, and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Both, of Cloyne. After the ceremony, a reception was held, and a delightful supper served in K. Both's public hall. The bridal couple received many beautiful and useful presents, showing the high esteem in which they are held.

Albert John, who recently was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. John, has returned to his homestead in New Ontario.

Miss Pearl Ready, who has been employed in Montreal, has arrived home.

Rev. G. J. Gaul, who was at his home in Colborne several weeks ago, has arrived here, accompanied by his son.

Arthur Ready was in Toronto on business.

NAPANEE SCHOOL BOARD

The Napanee Board of Education met in the Council Chamber on Monday evening, Chairman Alpine Woods presiding.

Members present, Messrs. P. Gleeson, Daly, Miller, Robinson, Boyes, G. A. Thompson, Pollard.

A communication from the Teachers' Superannuation Commission re rebate on teachers' insurance, was ordered filed.

A communication from the Routley Co., re repairs to the Collegiate furnaces, was read, and referred to the Property Committee to report.

The Finance Committee reported recommending payment of accounts of Brown Bros., $7.35; Cadet Corps, $81.42.

On motion report adopted.

Mr. McLean reported that there was likely to be a larger attendance at the Collegiate next term, and that another class room would likely have to be provided. Also that new regulations, which come into force next term, vocational training in the Collegiate will have to be considered, and should such a school be established a new wing, or a new building, would be necessary.

On motion the Whole Board will meet as a committee to consider the need of increased school accommodation on Tuesday evening next, at 7.30, at East Ward school.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO PASS A BY-LAW UNDER SECTION 472, S. S. 1, (B) OF THE MUNICIPAL ACT.

TAKE NOTICE that the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington will take into consideration the passing, and if approved, will pass at its next meeting to be held on the 13th day of June, 1922, at the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at the Council Chambers, in the Court House, at the Town of Napanee, a By-Law for altering and widening that part of former County Road No. 5 (Hamburgh Road) now designated by the Minister of Public Works and Highways as Provincial County Road No. 54—said altering and widening of said road to be at the location and in the manner hereinafter mentioned and particularly described—the said Corporation for that purpose expropriating the lands following:

PART No. 1—Parts of the south half of lot No. 19, in the 3rd concession of the Township of South Fredericksburgh.

PART No. 1—Which may be more particularly described as follows; that is to say; (being composed of a strip of land of various widths so to widen the Hamburgh road passing along the east side of said lot No. 19), COMMENCING at the intersection of the existing post and wire fence on the westerly side of said Hamburgh road with the fence forming the northerly boundary of the school lot at the south end of said lot No. 19, thence on a general magnetic course north 23 degrees west following fence on said westerly side of said Hamburgh road 3253 feet to the intersection of same with the south side of a by-road passing westerly across said south half of said lot 19, thence westerly following south side of said by-road seventeen feet; thence on a general magnetic course south 23 degrees east 815 feet where the width of said widening strip is 16 feet; thence on a general magnetic course of south 23 degrees east 200 feet where the width of said widening strip is 16 feet; thence on said general magnetic course of south 23 degrees east 354 feet where the said strip is 16 feet wide; thence on said general magnetic course of south 23 degrees east 681 feet to where said strip is 16 feet wide; thence on said general course of south 23 degrees east magnetic 665 feet to where said strip is 10 feet wide; thence on said general course of south 23 degrees east magnetic 538 feet to the said north side of said school lot where the width of said strip is 6 feet; thence westerly following said north boundary of said school lot 9 feet to the place of beginning.

PART No. 2—COMMENCING at the intersection of the post and wire fence forming the westerly boundary of the above described Hamburgh road with the fence forming the north side of the said by-road as described above in Part 1, thence on a general magnetic following the post and wire fence forming the west boundary of said Hamburgh road 233 feet to the northerly corner; thence same with the fence forming the north boundary of said south half of said lot No. 19; thence westerly along said last named 23 degrees 233 feet thence south 23 degrees east magnetic 233 feet to the said north side of said by-road where the width of said widening strip is 17 feet; thence easterly along said fence forming said north side of said by-road 17 feet to the place of beginning of parcel No. 2.

GOLDEN WEDDING

AN INTERESTING EVENT WAS HELD AT NEWBURGH

A very interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Wales, Newburgh, on April 22nd, when their children, with their various families, gathered together, as a surprise, to celebrate the golden wedding anniversary of their parents. The couple are very attractive and in good health. Mr. Wales has reached the age of seventy-one while Mrs. Wales is but sixty-nine.

The rooms were tastefully decorated with ferns and beautiful house plants. Shortly after eleven o'clock, when all the hearty handshaking and pleasant greetings had ceased, little Murriel Bell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Craig, and granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wales, was baptised. Mr. and Mrs. Wales were then brought forward and given seats of honor, while Rev. E. B. Cooke read an address and presented them with a gold plated mantle clock. Mr. Wales responded in a few short, but suitable and heartfelt words.

In the adjoining room sat the table groaning under its burden of dainty and delicious dishes. Here the company repaired to partake of this sumptuous repast, which was followed by a cheering toast to the bride and groom.

During the afternoon numerous musical selections were given by the company, and Rev. Mr. Cooke gave a short address. "God be with you till we meet again" was sung, and then amidst best wishes for many more years of happy wedded life, the guests departed for their homes.

Those present, in all numbering forty-two, were Rev. E. B. Cooke, pastor of Newburgh Methodist church; the four sons with their wives and children, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wales, Switzerville; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wales, Hawley; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wales, Wesley; and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wales, Violet; and four daughters, with their husbands and children, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Switzerville; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wartman, Wesley; Mr. and Mrs. Willie Robson, Bath; and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Craig, Switzerville; also Mr. and Mrs. Russell Craig, Switzerville.

DENBIGH

A large gathering assembled in the Lutheran church on the afternoon of the 26th inst., to witness the celebration of the marriage of Miss Freda Martha Both, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Both, of this place, to Mr. Henry William Kuehl, of Killaloe, by Rev. M. Voss, of Eganville. Miss Anna Stein assisted the bride, and John Both, brother of the bride, was the groom's best man. After the ceremony in the church the party assembled at the home of the bride, was the groom's best man. After the ceremony in the church the party assembled at the home of the bride's parents, which was a pupils' hall where a sumptuous repast awaited them. The bridal couple received many useful and costly presents, they are going to make their home in Killaloe where the bride has been teaching school for several terms.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hebert, of Vennachar, met with the serious misfortune last Monday to have their dwelling house, with nearly all contents, destroyed by fire. The fire is supposed to have originated from a defective chimney. There is a fair amount of insurance on the house, but none on the contents.

A more serious misfortune happened last Saturday to Mr. Ready Armstrong, a native of Denbigh, though his parents are now living near Clovne. He was employed by Mr. Chas. Smith to do his farm work, but A. Ready being away, and Mrs. Ready being short of help for her five stock, Huston offered to take her horses and get a load of hay for her. One of the horses is known to be tricky, and coming home with the load of hay the young man held in his hand. The end of the fork handle struck him in the face, breaking his nose and severely bruising, or perhaps breaking his skull. Dr. J. Adams at once attended to his injuries, and at once had him taken to the general hospital. The young man is of a quiet and agreeable disposition and has the sympathy and best wishes for his recovery of every one in the vicinity. Everybody is anxious to learn the result of his examination by the hospital surgeons.

Miss Pearl Ready has arrived home from Montreal.

Mr. Arthur Ready is away in Toronto on important business.

Albert was for a few days a welcome guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. John, but has already returned to his homestead in New Ontario.

SAVE THE RUSSIAN CHILDREN

The people of Canada have, through their contributions, made it possible to save about 75,000 Russian children from starving. This is much, and it is a source of satisfaction that the country has so well responded to the call for help. But there is still a great deal to be done. Millions of people are still threatened with starvation, and so the Canadian Committee still continues its work, and hopes to receive subscriptions to save at least 150,000 Russian children.

There are some who have been holding off their subscriptions, because in March and April there were so many calls upon them that they did not think they could afford to give; but having met these various obligations, these people can now afford to do something for the relief of the Russian children, and undoubtedly they will, if they are impressed with the fact that the need still exists.

There is no organization in Canada better informed on the situation in the famine stricken districts of Russia than the Save the Children Committee, and when it says that the need still exists, there is no reason for doubt on the matter. Help along by sending in your delayed subscription to Sir George Burn, Treasurer of the Save the Children Fund, Ottawa, or forward it through your local committee or bank.

DEFRAUDED CHINAMEN.

Two Toronto Women Charged With Mean Crime.

SARNIA, Ont., May 8.—With the arrest here Saturday afternoon of Margaret Allan, aged 56, and Hazel Blue, aged 22, both of Toronto, the local police claim to hold the perpetrators of a series of frauds carried out during last week at Hamilton, Kitchener, Brantford and London, by which the two women, suave and smartly attired, have obtained money, principally from Chinese restaurants and laundrymen on the pretext that they were canvassing for the hospital fund, for which they were operating. They had collected from nine Chinamen here on Saturday morning, but one Celestial was suspicious and asked the police if any hospital campaign was in progress.

Acting Detective James Byerley and Constable Chapman, while out searching the streets for the two, were accosted by their quarry, who asked the way to the Y.W.C.A. They were arrested and have been identified.

In a statement made to the police they state that they left Toronto Monday morning on a tour of the principal cities. They visited only Chinamen because the latter were good at giving money, asked few awkward questions. They had not previously been engaged in this swindle, they declared, having obtained the idea from two other women whom they saw operating the same game in a Toronto resturant.

They are smartly attired in navy blue costumes are young and of prepossessing appearance. One local Chinaman claims he gave money to the same two women for the hospital two months ago.

A Long Vacation.

A certain philanthropist is also a man of business, and is noted for his sympathy for the "down-and-outers." If possible he will give any deserving applicant for work a chance to "make good." On one occasion, it is stated, this gentleman was approached by an individual so utterly destitute in appearance that he may but the philanthropist himself would have had him ejected from the office. "Can't you find any work at all?" asked the rich man, when he had heard the man's recital of his woes. "I can find work all right," said the man, "plenty of it, but everybody wants references from my last employer." "And cannot you get these references from him?" "No, sir, he's been dead for twenty-five years."

United In Misfortune.

An old couple in the south of England were left destitute owing to their increasing poverty. Thinking their son in the north would help them, they wrote, stating their troubles, and saying that if he did not send them they would be obliged to go to the poor-house. A couple of weeks passed, and then came a letter from the son, saying: "My Dear Parents, Just wait another week, and I'll come home and go with you.—Your affectionate Son."

DESERONTO MAN DROWNS

AFTER FALL FROM DOCK—A CRIPPLE, AND UNABLE TO SWIM.

On Thursday, of last week, death in tragic fashion came to Robert Sager, of Deseronto, aged 45, and life-long resident of that town. He had been fishing from the dock of the Quinte Fuel and Supply Company and apparently fell into the water unnoticed by any of the townsfolk. He was unable to swim, and although the accident occurred probably towards noon, it was not until four o'clock in the afternoon that search for him became general and that his body was recovered. The late Mr. Sager appeared at about 11 a.m. with pole and line and bait in order to fish from the dock. No attention was then paid to him, but at 2.15 in the afternoon Robert Hunt, son of Milton Hunt, office boy in the company's proprietor, noticed a coat on the dock. He mentioned the fact to his father, who, becoming interested, made telephone many places in town in an effort to locate news of Mr. Sager. He was unsuccessful, however, and he immediately turned the matter over to the police.

The police chief, with a number of citizens amongst whom was Henry Howard, came to the scene of Sager's fishing operations. Howard obtained a boat-hook and within a few moments was successful in locating the body.

The coroner viewed the body and investigated the attendant circumstances of the accident. He decided, however, that an inquest was unnecessary.

Sager had been a cripple from infancy, and the general opinion is that owing to the tragedy that it occurred when he was walking over the smooth and slippery boards at the edge of the dock.

He was a son of the late Mr. Ellen Sager, who died about a year ago. Since his mother's death he had made his home alone at the family residence on Main street. He was a member of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Foresters.

AGED PROSPECTOR DEAD.

Had Spent His Life-time In the Mining Fields.

DAWSON CITY, May 8.—William Taylor, a pioneer prospector of the Klondyke, Caribou and Nevada silver camps, was found dead on Friday in his cabin here. He was 85 years old. Two sisters survive. They live in Woodstock, Ontario.

Left Home Long Ago.

WOODSTOCK, Ont., May 8.—William Taylor, the pioneer prospector who was found dead in Dawson City on Friday, was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Taylor, of Mount Oxford township, Oxford county. He was born on the family homestead there, and left for the West when he was quite a young man. He made but one visit back to his home, and that was about 20 years ago. He spent about sixty-five years in the mining fields of Western Canada and the United States. Three sisters, Mrs. Mary and Jennie, lived in this city. Saturday they received notification of their brother's death. The Ogram undertaking firm, Pioneers' Association of Dawson City had charge of the body and would look after the burial, which will take place in Dawson City.

Man and Boy Drown.

ARNPRIOR, May 8.—A double drowning fatality occurred here on Sunday, when Edward Lesage, aged 22, and John Murray Pountney, aged 10, lost their lives in the Madawaska river, at a camping site near the town. They were out sailing when their boat capsized.

Irvine Pountney, an elder brother of one of the victims, made a heroic attempt to rescue, but when he succeeded in struggling to shore with his brother it was found that the little lad was dead. Lesage's body has not yet been recovered.

Tried to Kill Husband.

SAULT STE. MARIE, May 8.—Mrs. Nellie Perry, found guilty at the Assizes here of shooting her husband with intent to do serious bodily harm, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment by Justice Latchford. The shooting took place last March in a vacant house owned by Perry on Albert street, and the bullet from a revolver perforated Perry's bowels in two different places.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

The farmer members are happy again; they have renewed hopes of a compulsory Wheat Board to handle the 1922 crop. As a consequence there is a new smile abroad on the fifth floor of the building, where their rooms are located, and there is considerably more optimism at the meetings of the Agricultural Committee. The Justice Department has ruled that by reason of recent legislation between the Dominion and Provincial parliaments there can be a compulsory Board formed, and the farmers are very hopeful that in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta they could get such legislation through without any difficulty.

The Justice Department ruling has cleared the air to a great extent and has given the committee an inkling of what it may work for again. For the last week or so the committee has been simply stabbing blindly in the dark in the hope that its work would lead to a ray of light somewhere. There will, of course, be many further meetings of the committee before anything definite comes out of it, but a report asking for concurrent legislation would appear most likely at the present moment.

The Public Accounts Committee, through the medium of which members of the House are occasionally able to resurrect scandals and discover, if and how the public funds have been dissipated, has started to work for the session and there is a motion on the order paper to refer the Auditor General's accounts and the Public Accounts to the Committee. That will mean that there will be much delving into the financial wanderings of the lately defunct Meighen administration, and some of the investigations may even go further back than the date of Mr. Meighen's accession to office. Some lively and interesting sessions ought to result.

The bringing on the resolution for the formation of a commission to study freight rates and try to bring about a reduction, started a somewhat acid and lengthy debate in the House on Thursday of last week. There had been indications of the form which that debate would take for the past week or so, so the House was not taken by surprise. Debate of this motion had been set for Tuesday of this week, but on that day the Prime Minister gave notice that it was proposed to defer debate on the matter until Thursday, so Mr. Meighen was happy in that he had two extra days to prepare for the matter. There was, of course, a charge that the government was taking the matter of adjudication of freight rates out of the hands of the Railway Commission which was the body competent to handle such matters. The government replied that the committee was required in view of the expiry of the suspension of the Crows' Nest Agreement with the C.P.R. in July and that this agreement was beyond the purview of the Commission.

During the week the House enjoyed the unusual spectacle of seeing a member of the Opposition rise to defend the government against what he considered an attack from one of its own members. Gen. J. A. Clark, Conservative member for Burrard, rose on a motion to go into supply to state that the government should oppose the Power motion to reduce the drill item in the Militia Estimates, and incidentally to praise the government by saying that it had been wise in cutting the militia expenditure to the point where it had been cut, and that the amount as set by the government should be carried through the House. Gen. Clark praised the Minister of Militia, Hon. Geo. P. Graham, for his frank handling of the matter when the estimates were brought down and said the opponents of the item were ill-advised. This brought Mr. Graham on to the floor with a defence of the motives of those who had moved to reduce the estimates. Major Power, he said, was not ill-advised. It was not a matter of difference of opinion between the government and its supporters as to the government's policy, but simply a matter of a member doing what he thought was in the best interests of his constituents and the country at large.

Subsequently the Power motion was discussed in the Government caucus, which was held on Wednesday, and the government's stand on the matter was placed frankly before the members. The result of it was that there was entire unanimity between and present, and the government was given the absolute support of its followers, not only on the militia estimates, but also on the other matters which have been brought before parliament. There may be some opposition in the amounts to be voted, but they will not be in all the total reductions suggested in Major Powell's motion.

The budget is likely to come down within the next week, it would appear. The Minister of Finance is, of course, keeping his own counsel in the matter and has not yet made any announcement, but it is generally expected that it will come down very shortly. Mr. Feilding has been absent from the House a couple of days, and in that time was presumably putting the finishing touches on his work.

A movement towards speeding up the work of government has come with the government's motion to take over Mondays and Wednesdays for government business on the order paper, leaving only Friday for private member's day. There are yet a flock of resolutions standing on the order paper in the names of private members, and from the look of things it would seem likely that they will be some of them settled there when the House prorogues. Several of them were cleared away this week, on Monday and Wednesday, but some of them placed there will take at least a day each, and with only one day a week for them, it is hardly likely that the slate can be cleaned before the final drop of the curtain.

The House is working along slowly and dully, but there is a ripple of excitement as the session continues, but for the most part the House has been in committee on the estimates, and while the committee mill grinds slowly, it grinds exceedingly small at times, and particularly when dealing with a lot of little local expenditures. Private members' resolutions produce a lot of talk and little action and there have been a lot of them disposed of during the week. With the bringing down of the budget the really hard slogging of the session will be under way and then it will be a matter of looking forward and counting the days until there is a prospect of the end coming within the range of vision.

GROWTH OF COLD STORAGE

MARKED DEVELOPEMENT OF THE SYSTEM IN CANADA IN A QUARTER OF A CENTURY

Cold storage should need no defence. Domestically it is valuable, and commercially it is invaluable. Anybody who uses a refrigerator in the summer months will recognize this. What it does for the householder on a limited scale, it does for the trader on a wholesale scale. It preserves whatever food is entrusted to it for future use. While this is an undisputed fact, there is as the Dominion Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner says, more or less prejudice against the system in the public mind. If the quality of certain food appears to have deteriorated, there is frequently a declaration that it has suffered from cold storage. Of course there may be some reason in the supposition, but experiments have abundantly proven that if a substance is placed in cold storage in a fit and wholesome condition, provided that the temperature is kept right, it will remain in that condition for a great length of time. Cold storage in a commercial way leads to and maintains a well-balanced state of supply. It enables unseasonable goods to be placed on the table in seasonable condition. It permits goods to be shipped for long distances. It enables districts to manufacture or grade certain lines of food to enjoy the lines produced in other and possibly far off districts and climes. In short cold storage has become indispensable to modern life, and while it may at times lend itself to certain abuses, these are not such as cannot be regulated.

While in other countries cold storage on a large scale had been before become a recognized factor in the meat business, it was not until 1894 that the first warehouse with mechanical refrigerating machinery was established in Canada. This occurred in Montreal, and gave an increase to the cold storage system. Prior to that there were a few small warehouses in which the cooling process was confined to gathered ice, and where the storage was of a limited nature. A quarter of a century later, or in 1919, according to data furnished by the Commissioner Ruddick, there had been 266 installations of mechanical refrigeration "in cold storage warehouses, abattoirs and other manufacturing establishments; nine warehouses equipped with the gravity brine system, and forty-seven small freezers, mostly for fish, where ice and salt were used as a refrigerant; altogether a total refrigerating space of 33,247,774 cubic feet. During the past two years further additions have been made, and now Montreal, through its harbor commission, has on the verge of completion the largest, best equipped, and most up-to-date cold storage warehouse extant.

Curious Canadians That Live Close to Arctic Regions.

Probably there is not more peculiar persons living than the Labrador Eskimo, and their mode of life and beliefs are very interesting. Although the Eskimo has little fear of death itself and hourly braves it in his kyak, or skin boat, or in the blizzards of the great white country, he is very superstitious. No sooner has death been pronounced than the entire household, and even neighborhood, set up wailing, weeping and tearing their hair. The other inhabitants of the village soon crowd around, and, as it were, join in "the chorus" of lamentations, extolling the virtues of the dead and magnifying them until the dead person becomes the glorification of a saint. Two watchers guard the body, for it is feared the spirit might overcome one man. To this

ABOMINABLE SNOWMEN

MOST REMARKABLE RACE IN THE WHOLE WORLD.

Mystery Men of Tibet Live Amidst the Perpetual Snows of Mount Everest and They Are Feared by Most Civilized Natives of the Country on Account of Their Ferocity.

Living amidst the perpetual snows of Mount Everest is a race of mystery men known in the Tibetan language as the "Abominable Snowmen," on account of their ferocity and the savage deeds they commit when they come in contact with the more or less civilized inhabitants of the region. Hairy Ainus, Bushmen, Patagonians, African Pygmies, and "Cannibal Amazons" have in turn excited our curiosity, but the "Abominable Snowmen" are more remarkable than any of them.

A great deal of mystery still surrounds the "Abominable Snowmen," and this it is believed, will not be cleared up until the exploration of Mount Everest is finally completed.

Col. Howard Bury, the leader of the Mount Everest expedition, states that at an elevation exceeding "the limits of possible habitation" he observed tracks resembling those of a barefoot man leading up the glacier. He did not at first report the fact, because he saw no man, and he thought that the tracks might be those of some animal which had been altered by the weather into human shape.

The numerous statements of the coolies who accompanied the expedition, and of many Tibetans and several white explorers, about the "Abominable Snowmen," have led Col. Bury to report what he saw.

The coolies who accompanied the Bury expedition state that they not only saw the footprints, but saw the wild men hanging around in the twilight, and ready to attack the explorers if they saw an opportunity, says an American paper. The coolies report that the wild men live entirely without clothes, and are protected from the intense cold only by their long, thick hair.

Investigation has further revealed that the existence of these people is known to many of the surrounding Tibetans, and that other white men had heard of them. Small colonies of the wild men are said by the villagers at the base of Mount Everest to live on the slopes of Everest and of the neighboring peaks of Chumalhari and Karola.

Some of the natives explain that the wild men are murderers who have been driven from civilized communities and forced to live in waste places. The colony on Mount Karola is said to be of this character, and it is reported that those exiles sometimes descend into the plains and rob the inhabitants.

But this explanation does not account for the statement that the "Snowmen" are wild and clad only in their own hair. Only a race with ages of adaptation to environment, it is argued, could live above the perpetual snowline, and sustain life on the few animals and birds that are found there.

Moreover, other white explorers have just come forward with new evidence concerning the existence of a race of "Snowmen" who live naked in the intense cold. William Hugh Knight, one of the best-known explorers of Tibet, read the report about the human footprints seen by the Bury expedition, and made this statement:

"Shortly before the last Tibetan war I was returning from Tibet with another European, a Tibetan guide, and our train of about forty or fifty coolies. We were coming down the track which leads from Gnatong to Sedonchen. As we got near Gantok, we had to climb the long ascent. My companion had gone on ahead with the coolies. I was about half a mile behind, about half a mile below Gantok.

"I stopped to breathe my horse on an open clearing, and dismounted, loosened the girth, and watched the sun. Which was just about setting. While I was musing, I heard a slight sound, and, looking around, I saw, some fifteen or twenty paces away, a figure, which I now suppose must have been one of the hairy men that the Everest expedition talk about.

"Speaking to the best of my recollection, he was a little under six feet high, almost stark naked in that bitter cold—it was the month of November. He was a kind of pale yellow all over, almost the color of a Chinaman, a shock of matted hair on his head little hair on his face, highly-splayed feet, and large, formidable hands.

"His muscular development in the arms, thighs, legs, back, and chest was terrific. He had in his hand what seemed to be some form of primitive bow. He did not see me, but stood there, and I watched him for some five or six minutes. So far as I could make out, he was watching some man or beast far down the hillside. At the end of some five minutes he started off at a run down the hill, and I was impressed with the tremendous speed at which he travelled."

The weight of evidence indicates that the creatures seen on Mount Everest were really men. That such human beings should be able to endure the cold of such heights, and find food, is amazing, but not altogether beyond the range of possibility.

Explorers have found that there is a certain amount of animal life above the perpetual snowline. On Mount Everest there are a good many birds and a few mammals, including the "whistling snow hare." Some of these creatures live by devouring other animals, and some find vegetation in little valleys and crevices just below the snowline. How men with their hearty appetites could exist on this scanty supply of food is hard to understand.

CANADA'S BOUNDARY.

Division Line Caused Much Quarreling in the Making.

From 1753 down to 1842, Uncle Sam and John Bull had quarreled about the line fence. They had tried to fix the boundary between Canada and the United States, but had failed. But in 1842 they got together again and hummed and hawed, and haggled over every square inch from the Atlantic to the Pacific. But at last they did agree. The Surveyor-General of the Topographical Survey Branch of the Department of the Interior, of both countries, sent out a survey party. At the source of the St. Croix river these surveyors built a monument. Through the woods from this monument they cut an 18-foot or so line. This line turned and twisted in every direction but east, until it ran along the forty-fifth parallel to the St. Lawrence. At the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods it started again and ran to the Pacific. On the most prominent hill at Lowman's Corner a monument was built. These monuments form the fence between Uncle Sam and Jack Canuck.

Between the provinces a similar line is run and similar monuments built. Like the International Line, a copper plug is put in the rock, or a stone post with a copper top is buried in the earth immediately in front of the monument. The Land Surveys Department of each province appoints a surveyor, who selects his party and surveys the line. The interprovincial lines, like the international line, and the meridian lines, are inspected upon completion and every number of years are retraced and the monuments rebuilt or repaired. Every Dominion Government survey party consists of a chief, two assistants, and a leveller, appointed by their department; two cooks, an instrument man, a couple of rodmen, a chainman, a picketman and from four to a dozen axemen and packers, selected by the chief.

In 1841 Lord Sydenham had townships surveyed. The population of Upper and Lower Canada rapidly increased. In 1849 Robert Baldwin grouped the townships into counties to give better municipal government. Thus were our counties created. The boundaries of the counties are defined by the townships, villages, towns and cities in them. The townships and populated centres were grouped in such a way that the county would contain sufficient population in order to be represented by a member in Parliament. This is how Eastern and Northern counties, with their rougher land and colder climates, and hence smaller populations, are so large, while Southwestern Ontario counties are so small because of denser populations.

Some young chaps have got married lately in our county and Ireland has sent us a delegation, so the census shows that our population has increased. Our grandfathers fought so much for Rep. by Pop. that some politician at Ottawa thinks it would be a shame not to carry it out. An election is coming off soon, so the Government passes a Redistribution Bill and divides our county into two electoral districts. Now they bind us with another boundary.

The mayor of Newville is a pretty sharp fellow. He has an eye on those people who have sneaked out to the outskirts and reared houses. He would like to make them pay their taxes to the town instead of to the township. The people object to having to pay the higher taxes of the town, and the township objects to losing their taxes. A few more street lights are strung up, a branch of the water main is taken out that way, a hydrant is stuck on the side of the road, and a sidewalk is promised. Now we can extend our nightly preambles by light, and the town can build a new town hall. The bounds of our municipality have been extended. There is no line or monuments. Just street lights and several more property holders' names inscribed on the town's tax sheet.

My neighbor wants to know how far this lot goes out towards the street. He wants to put up a fence to keep people from trotting on his lawn. His wife wants a fence between us so my kids won't play all over her flower beds. He wants to put a high fence around his back yard. He is a great man for lines and fences. His old cabbage stalks are destroyed. My neighbor brings up a surveyor who looks through a three-legged instrument at a picket on each corner. He unrolls a chain and measures the lot, draws a few marks on paper, charges my neighbor ten dollars and goes. Thus my neighbor adds a few months of life and confines my walks to my own small lawn, by building his fences.

Canada, and in fact all countries, have these six classes of boundary lines—international, interprovincial, intercounty, interelectoral, intermunicipal and inter-private property.

Doleful Humorist.

Stephen Leacock, during his recent lecture tour abroad, appeared at a popular seaside resort on the southern coast of England. The hall was a large one, but the audience was conspicuously small, Mr. Leacock thus began his address: "It has been forty-three years since my last appearance in B——; neither the sea nor the sky seems quite as blue as I remember them, and as for you, judging by the size of the audience to-night, that the population of the city has shrunk at least one-third!"

Not So Bad.

They always said a very long grace at the boarding house. All bowed their heads. But one evening the new boarder remained erect. This annoyed the landlady. "Atheism," I suppose," she rapped out. "No," said the new boarder, "boil on the neck."

Monocle Is Losing Hold That It Took on the Army When Empire Was Young

One of the decaying institutions is the monocle; or, is it becoming one of the lost arts? Eyeglasses and "specs" are multiplying, but the monocle has seen its day. It played a shining part on some quite respectable faces in English society and in some rather curious families of American society. It was popular for a time and then its popularity wanted. Popularity nearly always goes that way.

Several explanations have been given as to why the monocle was. Sir Horace Rumbold wrote that the fashion of wearing it was introduced at the Congress of Vienna—a congress which remade the map of Europe back in the last century. He told that it was a "diplomatic necessity" —which is the diplomatic language for "dude" — one Jonkheer Breele, who was the first man to wear a monocle, and he used this brand new fad to the diplomats and their followers assembled at Vienna. After that introduction the fad spread to all parts of Europe, but took its strongest grip on England.

Another authority has said that the monocle was made its first conquest in British army circles. An order had been issued that army officers should not wear eyeglasses or spectacles, these being considered evidence of defective eyes. A number of officers then took to wearing a monocle because they did have defective vision, and as a monocle was neither "eyeglasses" nor "spectacles" they got around the order. It was thought at one time that the habit was of distinction, and other officers whose eyes were all right took up the monocle on that account, their thought being something like that which prompted so many officers and enlisted men to take to carrying a short cane, which came to be called "a swagger stick." From military circles the monocle extended its influence to civilians and came to be "quite the thing, don't you know."

Towards the end of the first quarter of the nineteenth century the fad of wearing a monocle had become so popular that a writer of a book on the care of the eyes and the preservation of the vision inveighed against it. The name of the writer was Dr. Kitchener and in 1823 he published this book, the title of which was "Economy of the Eyes." Referring to the monocle he wrote: "A single glass set in a smart ring is often used by trinket fanciers for fashion's sake. These folks have not the least defect in their sight and are not aware of the mischievous consequences of such irritation."

Britain's Nickname.

Just as "Uncle Sam" is symboliscal of the United States, and "Jean Crapaud," with his exaggerated top hat and tightly-waxed moustache, represent France in literature and pictorial art, John Bull, bluff, hearty, and heavy-set, is the national figure of England.

Both he and his description date back to 1712, when Dr. John Arbuthnot wrote his political allegory entitled "The History of John Bull," a book which caused a great deal of comment at the time. Though this book itself has practically disappeared, John Bull, well fed on the roast beef of England, has survived more than two centuries.

It Was All Right.

A CENTENARIAN PREACHES.

An Oakville Methodist Possesses Wonderful Record.

Thomas Marmont Jefferis, of Oakville, Ont., is the oldest Methodist "saddle-bags man" in America. Born February 15, 1822, he is more than a year ahead of Rev. Seth Reed, of Flint, Michigan, hailed as the grand patriarch of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, who was born June 3, 1823.

Rev. Mr. Jefferis as a centenarian is the oldest Methodist preacher on the Methodist Church of Canada. Probably other denominations have older clergymen, but the Methodists have a pension roll which enables a close check to be kept on the life and service of their preachers. Since 1874, Mr. Jefferis has been receiving from the church a sum which is based on years of service. There is wide variation between salaries received from the Metropolitan Church, Toronto, to-day and the four pounds sterling which the circuit-rider Jefferis received from his county-wide parish two generations ago, but when the preachers "go on the fund," as the saying is, they are equals again and only service counts in calculating their pensions. To-day it is $18 per annum for each year passed in the so-called "active-work." Perhaps it is this pension which has given the old veteran such a quiet and fairly long evening of life after the persecutions and hardships of his earlier career.

In 1820, seven years old, young Jefferis went to work in a factory at Bath, England, his birthplace. In his youth he was stoned and egged, for being a local preacher and a teetotaller. Coming to Canada, in 1844, he was shipwrecked off Cape Breton, the vessel foundering, and the young preacher coming ashore in a small boat to conduct an evangelistic service on the beach. Riding the bush in Western Ontario, he swam unbridged creeks, rode through burning forests, became lost and imperilled by wild animals, lived on salaries which did not allow of a respectable appearance, conducted "protracted meetings" in log kitchens and open clearings and, finally, was forced out of the ministry when the union of Methodist bodies left no place for the older men. From 1874, he led a quiet life as a fruit farmer in Trafalgar township, Halmited Huguenot and West Country blood, he was a fiery preacher, and, to witness that evangelistic fervor has not died out in the family, one daughter is the wife of Dr. Wu, one of the missionary bishops of India under the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Romance of Duval's Board.

Full of wild romance is the tale of Duval's board on the Rock of Percee, which lies off the coast of Gaspe Peninsula, Province of Quebec. So many people have lost their lives in trying to climb up and recover the treasure supposed to be hidden there that the Legislature of the province has passed an act forbidding any one to try to scale the height without permission.

The rock is one of the natural wonders of the great North American continent. Thousands of years ago some terrific convulsion of nature must have torn it from the side of a mountain and left it standing five hundred feet high with a flat top and unscalable sides. At one time two caverns pierced the base on the seaward side, but one of them has collapsed and left only the larger, through which the sea thunders in stormy weather.

When Captain Duval, the French pirate, was hard pressed by the British he collected all his treasure and hailed for the rock. A Micmac Indian with whom he was friendly wormed his way upward through an opening in the greater of the caverns, and, reaching the top, let himself down a light line with which he hauled up a block and fall. He pulled up two British prisoners, then the captain himself. Boats contained the treasure stood by below. With muskets the tackle was shot away at a point so high on the rock that no one could reach it.

For two generations the rains rotted the stout hemp ropes on the side of the cliff until at last they disappeared. Though there are fishermen in Perce whose grandfathers saw the ropes, no one knows what happened to the two prisoners and the chests of treasure.

"Marian Keith."

The author of "Duncan Polite," "Silver Maple," and "Little Miss Melody," and a number of other widely-read novels depicting Canadian home life, is not generally known to the public except by her pen-name of "Marian Keith." In Orillia, however, where Marian Keith attended High School, they knew her as Mary Miller, from Rugby, and later as Miss Miller, the school teacher. Nowadays, in London, Ont., she is better known as Mrs. MacGregor, wife of Rev., D. C. MacGregor, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and as active as the minister himself in the work of the Young People's Society, the Missionary Society, the Sunday School, and all the other varied activities of a thriving church home. She also writes novels.

At a recent meeting of the Young People's Society, which Mrs. MacGregor always attends, there were a number of strangers, and a plan was devised to help everyone get acquainted. A big circle was formed and each person was required to rise and announce his or her full name, so that all might see and hear.

There were long names and short ones, but they were all fairly easy to remember. Finally it came to the turn of the minister's wife. There was a gasp of astonishment, and then much merriment, when she arose and, in slow, emphatic syllables, announced:

"Mary — Esther — Elizabeth — Miller—Marian—Keith MacGregor."

"There are no middle-aged people now; they are young, wonderful for their age, and then dead."

MARSHAL WAS BRIBED

SCANDAL STIRS THE PROHIBITIONISTS IN THE U. S.

Official Was In League With the Bootleggers and He Closed Up $100,000 In a Few Months—Now He Is Furnishing Evidence to Convict His Former Friends.

One of the most scandalous conspiracies to violate the prohibition law ever unearthed in the United States is that at Memphis, Tenn., which has already resulted in a dozen bootleggers and officials being sentenced to imprisonment, and which is likely to send as many more to the penitentiary. Curiously enough, the man by whose official connivance the city was flooded with whiskey for months, and who is now undergoing a term of imprisonment, is the chief witness against the lawbreakers. This is Tyree Taylor, formerly United States marshal. Taylor has repented and is doing everything to assist the authorities. That he has regained something of his old high standing in the community, though he is yet a convict, is indicated by the fact that judge and jury have been accepting his uncorroborated word in making convictions. He has been allowed a private satisfaction in sending to penitentiary the former friend who was responsible for his own exposure, because so far the jury has refused to convict this man. Indeed, he is the only one so far tried who has escaped.

In the few months that he was working at high pressure, it is estimated that Taylor collected $100,000 in bribes. This was at the rate of $2 for each case of whiskey that was brought into the city with his permission. This would represent 600,000 bottles of whiskey, quite enough to enable Memphis to live up to its proud boast of being as wet after prohibition as before. So long as Taylor was marshal and in league with the whiskey runners, the work of all other liquor sleuths was of no avail. He would know of every projected raid and could direct the smugglers as certainly as though he were the pilot on the bridge of a ship. Of course, there were other officials working with Taylor. He had to have accomplices, and it is understood that they were taken care of separately. Some of them have been convicted. Others will be convicted in the near future.

When Woodrow Wilson was elected President and could direct the Taylor's friends bestirred themselves and secured him an appointment as Deputy United States Marshal for Western Tennessee, with headquarters in Memphis. A couple of months later he was appointed chief deputy. At that time, and for a long time afterward, he was active in the discharge of his duties, and an inveterate foe of the whiskey runners. It was not until July, 1918, that Taylor succumbed to temptation. He fell because he was offered a lot of money, and because at that time he happened to need a lot of money in connection with divorce proceedings. Having once accepted, he could not refuse a second bribe, and perhaps he had no desire to do so. The word would be passed from one bootlegger to another that Taylor would listen to reason.

The money poured in on him as the whiskey poured in on Memphis, much of it by motor truck and much more by boats, bought for the purpose, and plying on the Mississippi. Soon it became apparent that some official was in league with the bootleggers, and it was not long before Taylor's name was whispered about.

A Secret Service man was sent to investigate and he heard the talk about Taylor. At that time Taylor was boarding with the woman, whom he afterwards married, and had a telephone in her home. It was at the suggestion of C. H. Hottman, a sporting man about town, that the detective tapped the telephone line. He heard conversations by both Taylor and the lady who is now Mrs. Taylor, which supplied all the information that was needed. Taylor was suspended, but not arrested. He went to Arkansas and bought a fine plantation, although his salary was only $135 a month.

Three months later he was indicted and returned to give bond. Then he left Memphis, and was not seen again until he was arrested in New Orleans two years later. In those years he had done some extensive traveling, hiding in Alberta, California and Florida. He had a passport to Mexico, but at the last moment declined to use it. His undoing was brought about by a sudden flying visit he made to Tennessee to visit his parents. The authorities were close on his heels and he remained only one day. Nevertheless, he got clear away, and the detectives knew little of his whereabouts for five months. Then he wrote a letter to a friend, which was intercepted, and he was arrested in New Orleans.

For Vain Males.

A man can manage somehow to get along without a powder rag, but there are occasions when he does need a mirror and comb for emergency use. To meet this demand, Gustav Pesztenak, of Trenton, N.J., has contrived a holder for both articles which may be conveniently fastened inside of a hat. It is sewn in, being made of cloth, a rectangular piece of which is attached to the inside of the hat by snap fasteners at the corners. This makes the back of the holder; the front is provided by a second piece, of like size, secured to the first one by stitching. The two thus form a pocket. A horizontal line of stitching divides the pocket into two compartments, an upper one to receive the mirror and a lower one to hold the comb. One end of the pocket is left open to permit insertion of comb and glass. A slide fastener engages the open end of the comb to hold it in place, and the safety of the mirror is obtained by a flap which snap fastens over it.

SUCH PAINS AS THIS WOMAN HAD

Two Months Could Not Turn in Bed. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Finally Restored Health

Seattle, Washington.—"I had dragging pains first and could not stand on my feet, then I had chills and fever and such pains in my right side and a hard lump there. I could not turn myself in bed and could not sleep. I was this way for over two months, trying everything any one told me, until my sister brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it regularly until all the hard pains had left me and I was able to be up and to do my work again. The hard lump left my side and I feel splendid in all ways. I tell many women it has helped."—Mrs. G. RICHARDSON, 4640 Orcas St., Seattle, Washington.

This is another case where Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought results after "trying everything any one told me" had failed.

If you are suffering from pain, nervousness and are always tired; if you are low spirited and good for nothing, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. You may not only relieve the present distress, but prevent the development of more serious trouble.

Feeding Silkworms.

Much interest has been awakened by the experiments at Lyons, France, in feeding silkworms with leaves stained with various dyes in order to cause them to spin silk of corresponding hues. When fed on red food the worm spins red cocoons, and the silk seems to retain the color. The experiments with leaves stained blue have been less successful. Although the expectation has been raised that this process may prove of commercial importance, the experimenters say they do not expect to make any discoveries which will affect the industry of dyeing.

Three Stills Seized in Different Spots.

Three stills, one at Tweed, another on the Indian Reserve in Tyendinaga, and a third in the town of Deseronto, were seized by Major A. C. McFee, Inspector of Customs and Inland Revenue License, Inspector Naphin, and Officer W. J. Cook on Wednesday last as the result of one day's round-up. The Deseronto one is said to belong to Murray Maracle, while that on the Reserve was found at the home of David S. Brant, who has been in trouble with the authorities of late. At Brant's there are said to have been three mashes working and about 60 or 70 gallons of the mash. The plants were seized and the material, as much as was necessary, was taken and the rest destroyed. The Tweed plant was a small one.

Entire Family Arrested.

David S. Brant, his wife, Elizabeth, son Burton, and his three daughters who are alleged to have resisted an officer of the provincial police in an effort to arrest D. S. Brant, was arrested last week on the Indian reserve to which the family belongs. Magistrate Bedford allowed the three daughters to go on their own recognizance until Tuesday, but the father, mother and son are on the hill at Belleville until Tuesday this week when they will be brought back to Deseronto to stand trial before Magistrate Bedford on the charge of resisting. It is said that Brant and the family resented the appearance of Provincial Constable Fred Hughes and Chief Bowen, of Deseronto, when they sought to execute a warrant for committal in the case of the failure of Brant to pay a fine.

VALOR OF THE BRITISH

DARING ASSAULT OF TICONDEROGA NOW RECALLED.

Grim Fortress Which Guarded Canada In Days of French Occupation Is Now Being Restored In Minute Detail—Owned by Americans But More Interesting to Us.

Fort Ticonderoga is being restored. Wraiths of Highlanders who fell before its walls may marvel at the recreation. Avenged only on the Plains of Abraham, they may well stalk about o' nights to witness again in imagination the triumph of Montcalm and the folly of Abercrombie. For Ticonderoga was a terrible if glorious tragedy.

July 8, 1758, set the precedent for advancing without artillery preparation on an impenetrable position, sending up wave after wave of infantry when the objective is hopeless, substituting valor for brains and keeping the general out of personal peril. In these and many other respects, Ticonderoga is a very modern battle.

In a setting of extraordinary natural beauty, at the junction of Lake Champlain and Lake George, between the Adirondacks and Green Mountains, and commanding the approaches to the St. Lawrence and the Hudson rivers is a grim, gray pile, Fort Ticonderoga (the French Carillon) one of the greatest and most interesting historical monuments in the New World.

The American owners of the site hoped to refurbish some of the glories of the Revolutionary War. But the fortress figured in a minor role in that struggle, whereas in the Seven Years War it was the scene of one of the most desperate engagements ever fought in the Western Hemisphere. To the impartial student of history the restoration will conjure up visions of kilted Scots with claymores and blue-coated New Englanders with bayonets struggling in an abattis of felled trees throughout a brazen afternoon till thousands of dead and dying were left impaled on sharpened branches before a smoking hill.

In 1759, Bourlamaque, builder of Carillon, had to burn his works and flee before Lord Jeffrey Amherst. In the next generation all was rebuilt and extended, only to be abandoned to time and rural despoilers after the Revolutionary War.

After reaching almost complete decay in the last century, the fort was suddenly remembered. Stephen H. P. Pell, owner of the site, undertook painstaking researches and, monumental labors and is about to present the result to the United States. In many ways Great Britain and Canada have as great an interest in the memories which enrich the place, so that it may become something sacred to all these nations.

The completion of Fort Carillon, in 1757, signalized the purpose of France to defend New France by attacking Albany and New York. Pitt met the challenge by entrusting an army of 15,000 men to Maj.-Gen. Abercrombie and Brig.-Gen. Lord Howe. Pitt knew that Abercrombie was a fat, old incompetent, but the general's pull was too strong and the Premier knew that Howe was a great man. While Abercrombie wheezed about, Howe welded Highlanders, English regulars and New England rangers into one spirited army of which he was the veritable soul. For the first time in history, Old Countrymen and Colonists soldiered together in harmony. They were determined to destroy Carillon, sweep up the Richelieu and capture Montreal in one campaign.

Of course, Abercrombie knew he could have starved Montcalm into making a fatal sortie in about one week. Or he could have dominated Ticonderoga with big guns. But that was not the way of a Braddock or an Abercrombie. The assault began. It was an uncounted series of charges, for the abattis stopped them short. Highlanders with broadswords hacked at the interlaced branches, "shrieking to heaven in terrible anger." The redcoats advanced steadily, firing at the caps of their well-hidden foe. The New Englanders broke many times but kept returning to the attack for four hours.

Where all showed so much valor it would be invidious to praise any, but a party of Highlanders once reached the wall, climbed it and leaped into the fort—only to be bayonetted by the French regulars. Late in the afternoon Abercrombie appeared and ordered a final assault. While the Indians and frontiersmen looked on grimly at this immense folly, the spirit of Howe swept ahead and his men made their last sacrifice. Not to dwell on the horror of that scene of slaughter, the survivors of the attacking columns were taken with a panic as night fell and they did not regain self-control until again crossing Lake George.

For the victory of Ticonderoga, better known to the French as Carillon, Montcalm held a great service of thanksgiving and raised a monument which—so suddenly variable are the fortunes of war—fell to the British the next year. To the memory of Lord Howe and the 1,944 who fell that day, the people of Massachusetts Bay erected in Westminster Abbey a mournful tablet and the people of England called the defeated general "Mrs. Nabby-Cromby."

Pitt never ceased to regret the blunder of letting Abercrombie's army face such a terrible task.

The actual work of reconstruction has been placed in the hands of an English architect, Alfred C. Bossom, resident in New York. The British Government has donated guns bearing the name of George III. to replace the guns originally facing Lake George.

Women, on an average, have heads broader in proportion to their length and darker eyes and hair than men.

Cabinet Crisis Averted.

TORIO, May 8.—The Japanese Cabinet crisis, which early last week when Premier Takahashi was reported to have requested the resignation of his Cabinet in order to form a new Government in sympathy with his views, has been temporarily averted.

The Premier announced at a meeting of the Cabinet that he would not persist in this request, as there were other business requiring the Cabinet's immediate attention.

Assiniboine Drops.

BRANDON, May 8.—While there has been no official report of a decrease in the height of the Assiniboine river, it has dropped about an inch in some places on First street, which is now closed to traffic. The people living in the north are cut off from the city. Other conditions are about the same.

Hurled Baby Out of Train.

NORTH BAY, Ont., May 8.—The inquest into the death of the infant child of Beatrice Nicholls, who is alleged to have confessed to hurling the baby out of the window of the train in which she was returning to this town from Toronto, will be held this week.

The remains of the child were found near Claybo station, between Janetville and Lindsay, at 10.30 on Saturday morning. The party was led by Provincial Officer Ward, who was sent down from Toronto at the request of Crown Attorney Anderson. The jury viewed the remains on Saturday night and the injury was adjourned.

An official statement says that marks on the body indicate that the child died as a result of injuries received when dashed to the ground from the train. The crown's case against the mother will await the finding of the inquest.

Robertson to Tell Story.

BLOOMFIELD, N.Y., May 8.—Alec. E. Robertson, the young Kingsish war hero, who says Burns detectives "kidnapped" him because the daughter of U. S. Senator Culberson of Texas returned his love, prepared to-night to journey to Washington and tell his story to officials of the British Embassy.

Robertson has pledged himself not to involve Miss Mary Culberson in any litigation which may be attended by publicity, but he says he feels it his duty as a British subject to do as the Embassy staff wishes.

He has received a letter asking him to present himself in Washington immediately.

NO PROGRESS AT GENOA

Premier Lloyd George Working to Save Conference.

Russia and France Will Be to Blame If Attempt to Re-organize Europe Meets With Failure—Soviet Government Is Jockeying to Put Other Nations In Bad Light With Workers of the World.

GENOA, May 8.—It is understood to be the opinion of Premier Lloyd George that the three main purposes for which the conference here was called cannot be accomplished. These purposes were: First, a general settlement with Russia by all the European nations; second, the reintroduction of Germany into good international society, and, third, a pan-European treaty of non-aggression for a definite number of years.

The first appears to be blocked by the Russian demand for the big Government loan and the French demand for restitution of private property nationalized by the Soviets. The second has been blocked by the German-Russian Treaty made behind the backs of the other powers, and the third will have been blocked by the impossibility of a general Russian agreement and by the refusal of the neutrals and Germany to accept the French insistence on the clause stating that she has a right to act as she sees fit as regards military action against Germany to enforce the Treaty of Versailles.

It being impracticable to do all he started out to do, the British Prime Minister is making the best effort in salvaging as much as possible of his original program. There are varied opinions as to what he can do, but it is difficult to make a reasoned prediction before the Russian reply to the statement of conditions handed to them by the powers without the signatures of France and Belgium. Russia's two biggest creditors.

It is the general prediction, based on the declaration of the Russian delegates, that they will not accept the powers' memorandum as a basis for discussion unless they are assured of a favorable reply to the loan, in the second place, if they are assured of a loan they will not accept Article 7, relating to private property, which, as it stands, is not strong enough to suit the French and the Belgians. It is then expected generally that the Russian reply will approach a rejection without demur for the door to the possibility of further negotiations.

However, it is reported that a very high personage in the conference has advised the Russians to be up and at out the powers' memorandum, tacking on their demand for a loan. The Russians gave no indication that they would accept the offer. In fact, there was much talk of a report that Premier Lenin had instructed them to reject the terms and make an appeal to the workers of the world.'

But M. Tchitcherin is astute. He knows European politics. He knows there is a tendency to arrange to place the blame for the conference's failure on Russia. The Russians stand in the position now of being almost about to burst the conference. Were they to accept the memorandum they would "pass the buck" to the powers, for it was drawn up by Mr. Lloyd George and his co-workers to arrange a statement of the conditions to which France and the Soviets would agree.

Were the powers able to work out a statement of the conditions which would suit them all, it would unquestionably be input for the Soviets than the present memorandum, and the Russians could-reject the new document and be able to proclaim to the world that they were reasonable enough to suit thirty-one nations of Europe, but that two, France and Belgium, were not quite reasonable. This would be valuable propaganda for Russian use both at home and abroad.

There is much speculation as to what will happen if the Russians half-way or two-thirds way accept the conditions before them under the stipulation of a loan, and that it is impossible to get the French to accept a formula which can be discussed with the Russians. An attempt at further negotiations then would unquestionably lead to the withdrawal of France and Belgium, leaving Russia and the Little Entente to do what they could to balk progress. This would always leave open the question of a loan, and no one would be in a better country to offer gold for Moscow's confer. There is a report that to save the conference Mr. Lloyd George would pledge himself to try and raise £200,000,000 for the Soviets, but there is no official confirmation of this.

But what appears most likely is that it will be found impracticable to carry the Russian negotiations here to an even partially successful finish. The probable outcome will be that the conference will be adjourned and a Committee of Investigation sent to Moscow to report on the failure of Genoa. When this may be done cannot now be said. It depends on the next two or three days.

Body of Hunter Found.

NORTH BAY, Ont., May 8.—As the result of a search instituted last week by Hon. Peter Smith, of Dellslow, West Virginia, brother of the victim, the body of Ellis Trowbridge, who was drowned last autumn in Hunter Township, while on a hunting trip last fall, was recovered on Friday and is now in North Bay, awaiting transportation to West Virginia.

The later Mr. Trowbridge, whose home was in Pittsburg, Pa., went into the Mud Lake district with a party of other hunters early last November, and on November 4, he was reported missing. Some days later a hunting belt, the upturned canoe which pointed to his tragic death. Search for the body had to be discontinued the following day owing to a sudden freeze-up of the lake.

New Governor of Bermuda.

HAMILTON, Bermuda, May 8.—Gen. Sir James Willcocks, the most decorated man in the British army, is to be succeeded as Governor of Bermuda by Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Joseph Asser, advices received here state. Sir John Joseph Asser was born in 1867, entered the British army in 1887, was attached to the Nile Expedition in 1897-98, was present at the battles of Atbara and Khartoum, and commanded the Soudan Expedition, 1899.

AVOIDED A CIVIL WAR

Irish Parties May Form Coalition Government.

Peace Appears Certain In Southern Ireland Following Recent Truce —Candidates Will Probably Be Named by Agreement for the June Elections—Seeking Plan to Please Rebel Forces.

DUBLIN, May 8.—The net effect of the official reports of the peace conference, both military and civil, encourages the belief that internecine struggles between the two sections of the Dail Eireann, with its splitting of the army, is ended for the present. If the peace committee agrees to a basis for peace it is believed the Dail will endorse it.

The terms of the settlement have not been made known, but the whole course of the discussion points to Irish unification. It is also along been agreed by both sides that the Dail Eireann must be the supreme government pending the people's decision, and both sides are equally agreed that the Dail is unitedly Republican, though differing concerning the means of attaining that end.

Eamonn de Valera has fought against the exercise of any powers of government to be subject to the Dail. This was resisted by the members of the Provisional Government, who claimed that as such they were not answerable to the Dail. The foremost portfolios — finance, home affairs, local government, agriculture and economic affairs, are held by men who fill the same posts in the Provisional Government. This secures harmonious co-operation, but is not acceptable to Mr. de Valera and his adherents. The idea is to have de Valera and some of his most prominent supporters once more members of the Dail Eireann.

The elections already fixed for June 15, according to the plan outlined, would not be polled, but an agreed list of candidates would be settled upon, embracing both sides and the result would be a new Dail Eireann, supposedly with the representatives of Labor and others. There are several members of the Dail Eireann, including de Valera, Griffiths and Collins, now sitting for two constituencies, one in Northern and one in Southern Ireland. In June they could each abandon one seat, this leaving vacancies for men who had been agreed upon. It is suggested that there should be two Labor members, two representatives of the Four Courts Army executive, and two representatives of big business added to the Dail.

If the army became reunited, a point in question would be whether the army should be wholly under the Dail's jurisdiction, or as the disciples have contended, be autonomous, governed in accordance with its own choice.

Meanwhile, the truce has been extended indefinitely, and the fact that an agreement has been reached for the evacuation of the Port Road offices by the irregulars is taken as evidence that peace all around under a new regime is certain.

MURDERS AMONG IDLE RICH

Former Ontario Man Killed Wife and Committed Suicide.

BOSTON, Mass., May 8. — The ashes of William B. Powell will be sent to his birthplace at Port Dover, Ont. William B. Powell last Tuesday shot his wife and then killed himself. They lived at their beautiful villa in Brookline, and Powell was considered one of the richest Ontario men residing in the Greater Boston. His wife was the widow of R. H. White, a millionaire merchant, whose name is a byword in Boston. Insanity is given as the cause of the double tragedy. Powell insanely believed that his wife was intimately related to one of his servants. Her friends and family claimed that any such inference was preposterous, and that Powell, who had been drinking heavily for some time, was insane when he shot his wife, and a moment later committed suicide.

Funeral services for the late Mr. Powell will be held Monday at Mount Auburn Cemetery Chapel at Cambridge. Rev. Barrett Taylor officiated. The funeral was strictly private. The Beethoven Quartet sang a few selections. The body was cremated at the Mount Auburn Crematory.

Powell, in his will, left many thousands to Port Dover beneficiaries. According to Mrs. Powell's brother, this will is to be contested bitterly on the ground that Powell died first, and his wife was his heir.

On the same day that Powell shot his wife, another millionaire named Hubbard, of Hubbard Germicide fame, was shot to death by his wife in West Roxbury, a few miles from the palatial home where he formerly lived. Never before in the history of Greater Boston had two such crimes been committed by people of social prominence on the same day.

WILSON'S HARDWARE. SON'S.

FOUR YOUNG MEN DROWNED

Squall Upset Birchbark Canoe on Lake.

NEW LISKEARD, Ont., May 8.—One of the saddest tragedies in the history of the north country occurred Sunday morning when four young people were swept under the waves and drowned when a sudden squall on Lake Timiskaming turned over their birch bark canoe about a mile and a half from shore.

The dead are:

Norman Montgomery, aged 16, son of the manager of the Nipissing Central Railway.

Percy Wall, aged 18, and James Wall, aged 21, brothers, sons of Mrs. Hoover, New Liskeard.

Marshall Medcalfe, aged 17, a visitor in New Liskeard from Montreal.

The unfortunate party were on a fishing trip and had set out on what looked like a fair morning for Dawson's Point, a distance of about three miles from the town. Their craft was a birch bark canoe.

When they had proceeded about half way to their destination a sudden squall arose, and, realizing the boys made a strong attempt to reach the New Liskeard wharf. Captain Reynolds, who was watching the canoeists from his window, stated that they were three hundred yards from shore when they were hidden from view by the tops of the roofs. This is the last glimpse that is known to have been secured of the four. Although a thorough search has been made by Mr. Montgomery in his motor launch along the shore between here and Haileybury and to the east of the wharf, no trace has been found of either the bodies or the canoe. It is said that the northeast wind which was blowing here all day would account for such craft on the east side of the lake.

Egypt Wants Soudan.

CAIRO, May 8.—An acute crisis is foreshadowed owing to the action of the commission which is drawing up a constitution for the new Kingdom of Egypt in decreeing that the Soudan is to be an integral part of Egypt and that the King of Egypt is to have sovereignty over that country. This is apparently a reply to the British communique of last Thursday, which stated that Great Britain had no intention of relinquishing control of the Soudan. The situation may involve the restagnation of the Egyptian Ministry.

The Mystery of the Silver Dagger

By RANDALL PARRISH

Author of "The Strange Case of Cavendish"

Illustrations by A. Wall

Copyright, by Randall Parrish

What could it mean, but that she was secretly ashamed to permit of my full understanding? The thought of the stolen money, the murder of Alva, recurred to me; the invitation I had overheard for her to accompany him on his fatal trip, and her acceptance; the positive assertion of Harris that she had done so; her confessed knowledge that the money had actually been given into the possession of the Chilean captain; the nature of the weapon with which he had been killed; her remaining in New York instead of returning to Washington. I could not blot these things out, no matter how hard I endeavored to reconcile them with her denials. I trusted her; I would continue to trust her against the world, yet deep down in my heart lingered a question unanswered. If she was honest, square, actuated by some worthy purpose, why did she still refuse to confide in me? Surely I had been sufficiently tested—and she knew who I was. If she was the sister of a classmate whom I knew and loved, what necessity remained for the concealment of her name? What, indeed, except shame at the part she was playing in this sordid drama of life? Some of my earlier suspicion had been eradicated, for now it was clearly demonstrated that it could not have been her knife which had pierced Alva's heart. Whatever else I might believe against her, this evidence no longer existed, for she still wore the dagger in her hat. Peculiar as the design was, the weapon locked in my valise, which I had picked up blood-stained on the floor of the car, was not hers; it had been wielded in its deadly work by some other hand. But whose? Did she know? Did she even suspect the assassin? Was she even now endeavoring to conceal his identity? These questions were unanswerable; I could only partially drive them back by memory of the girl herself; it was impossible to recall her viridity to mind, and yet associate her with so foul a crime.

I was still immersed in such thoughts, mentally struggling for her honor, and my own justification, when I finally attained the quiet of my room. I was scarcely up against a stone wall; there was no light perceptible anywhere. Neither Harris nor Waldron was guilty of this crime; they were obliterated from further consideration. These two worthies had undoubtedly done their best, but had been outgeneraled by some one else; and, whoever that other might be, he had made a clear get-away, leaving but even a lurking suspicion behind him. It was the job of a master-thief, an expert in crime—or else had been accomplished through the blind luck of some one whose very identity clouded any possibility of suspicion.

My glance wandered about the room aimlessly fell upon the valise in one corner. It was just where I remembered leaving it when I went out, yet I saw something which surely resembled a slash in the leather. I crossed over, and bent down; it was a slash, the clean cut of a knife, running from end to end, penetrating through both leather and cloth. Whoever had done the deed had been unable to operate the lock, and had used the blade as a last resort, slitting the entire bag wide open. I inserted my hand and felt within; nothing seemed missing, or greatly disturbed. I explored to the bottom, and then sprang to my feet in startled amazement—the dagger I had concealed there was gone!

Good God! what could be the meaning of this? She had worn that ornament in her hat openly, purposely, to fool me into believing her innocent. There could be no other explanation. She had confessed being at the hotel, seeking to locate me, and the number of my room. What would prevent her coming up here unobserved, then, while I was out, and gaining entrance? And who else would have any reason to thus search through my things, and abstract this important evidence of crime?

Yet how did she know I had it? How did she even suspect I was the first to discover the dead body, and bear away with me the tell-tale weapon, with which Alva had been murdered? I had no means of knowing how—only she alone had special reason to regain possession of that knife. And she had even dared later to flaunt it in my very face, to show it to me in her possession, just as though it had never passed out of her hands! Here was revealed a depth of duplicity, a criminal audacity, not to be expressed in words; this soft spoken girl, this woman to whom I knew I had given my heart, stood revealed now in all her hideousness—a murderess, a thief, a scheming criminal, coolly concealing the trail of her crime, and using her very charms of face and manner to conceal from me her true nature.

Perhaps she would see me again—perhaps! The door was yet wide upon her lips. She had gone away laughing at the simpleton who had believed her, the dupe who had so easily been deceived by her smiles. The chances were she had disappeared already, vanished, left the city, assured that no evidence now remained behind to ever connect her with this terrible affair. She cared nothing for me—I had been a mere tool, pliant in her hand—I remained merely in her memory as something to laugh about, another victim, a blind, groping fool, with whom she had played to her heart's desire.

I sat with my head in my hands staring at the mutilated bag, racked with anger and self-misery. I had been easy, a mark of derision and ridicule; a mere screen for her to hide behind, while her accomplice, if she had one, escaped with the spoils. Then the reaction came; the thought that perhaps I had not read the story wholly aright; the faint hope that it might not prove exactly as I had pictured in my first wild burst of passion. It was too infamous, too unthinkable. Why, if she was guilty, should she have remained in New York? Why should she have sought me out, or listened so intently to the questions of those two men at Perond's? What could she possibly gain by thus overhearing the tale of their failure, if she already knew who was the murderer of Alva, and what had become of the spoils?

I could ask these questions, but not one was answerable. They merely mocked me with their emptiness.

Then, shrill and insistent, the telephone rang.

My heart was beating like a trip-hammer as I took down the receiver. Who could be calling me at this hour? Who except she alone in this city knew my name and hotel?

"Hullo."

A man's voice spoke huskily. "This you, Daly?"

"Yes," hastily, instantly aware of who was on the other end of the wire, yet feeling it best to dissemble until I learned the purpose.

"Who is speaking?"

"The fellow you biffed with a bottle tonight. No, I ain't got no hard feelings. Besides, I got something else to think about than a cracked dome. Say, I got some dope on how that job was did, an' maybe could tell you something else of interest. I got to talk with you privately—that's what. It's a matter for the girl as well as yerself. I'm playing square as long as you do the right thing, but I know who the game is, an' I'm liable to squeal if I get a raw deal; that's putting it straight, Harry."

"You know who she is, you say?"

"Sure I do. Old Pierre, over at Perond's, told me. He never forget a face, or a name, that old duffer. He knew you the minute you blow in and he knew her, too; she'd been there before slumming."

"Who is she, then?"

"That all right—I know; but I ain't fool enough to blow it over the wire. It ought come over here and have a talk. I'll add a few things to your stock you wise."

"Where are you?"

"At Gonigan's."

"What's become of your partner?"

"Who's that—Waldron? He ain't no partner of mine. Say, you must have handed that guy some joit. The last I saw of him, he was laid out on a bench in Perond's back room breathing like a stuck pig, dead to the world. Will you come over here?"

"What have you got to tell me?"

"Well, there's the dame's name for one thing. I'll bet you don't even know who she is, or how she's stringin' you. Then I'm on to where a part of that boodle's planted—anyhow I've got a hunch. If we turn it up, I'm still strong on the fifty-fifty proposition."

"I'll Bet You Don't Even Know Who She Is."

I turned it over swiftly in my mind, the receiver still at my ear. I felt no particular fear of Harris; to be sure, in all probability, he was only feeling about in the dark, hoping in this way to learn something of value, yet it might be that he had accidentally uncovered the girl's identity, and that alone was inducement enough to urge me to take the risk. If he actually knew who she was, he was the kind that might become ugly, and, however much I suspicioned her in my own mind, I had no desire to leave her undefended at his mercy. Guilty or not guilty, my inclination was to protect her to the last. Besides I was eager to obtain the information he claimed to possess; indeed, all progress on the case was blocked until I did obtain it. As to his boast that he knew where the stolen money was concealed, I took little stock in that. Doubtless he merely threw that in for good measure. But the other looked reasonable enough; she had confessed being at Perond's before; there was reason as likely to recall her to memory as he was to remember Daly, and Harris could never have made so shrewd a guess, unless he had really been told the facts. Another thing gave me courage to go to Costigan's. I was still accepted by these people as Harry Daly, crook. I would undoubtedly be so received, so treated. Under these circumstances there could be no personal danger. I held the whip-hand, the advantage—Harris was only endeavoring to see what he could get out of me; he had abandoned force to resort to diplomacy.

"All right," I said. "I'll run over there; if you want to play fair, I'll meet you half way."

"Oh, I'm on the square, old man, and I've got some good dope," he insisted. "I'll blow it when you show up."

I returned the receiver to the hook, uncertain whether or not I had decided rightly, yet determined to carry out the experiment. Above all else I wanted to learn who Marie Gessler was. Nothing else mattered so much, for on this discovery all else hinged. If violence, or treachery, was intended, I would be found prepared, and well able to defend myself.

The neighborhood into which I was venturing induced me to take a taxi, and, within ten minutes, I was deposited at the door of the saloon. I pressed open the swinging door, and stepped into the brilliantly lighted barroom.

Costigan was behind the bar, but, at sight of me, rounded the end, and shook hands cordially, removing his apron, and slipping into a coat, in token that he had changed his occupation.

"Better call Charlie," he said to a man beside him, "for I'll be off for an hour or so. You came to see George?"

"Yes; he telephoned me."

"Said he was goin' to. He's waitin' in the office there. I'll go along with you."

He pushed a passage through the crowd, his breadth of body according me ample room in which to follow without being noticed, and opened the closed door with a pass-key. To a wave of his big hand I passed confidently past him, and entered. The next instant he had pressed me forward, came in also, and closed the door. Then the click of the lock sounded like the report of a pistol. One startled glance at the interior told me I was trapped, and the swift instinct of defense led me to step aside, so that I should have my back to the wall. Harris sat in the swivel chair, with feet elevated on the desk, sardonically grinning at me over a half-chewed cigar tilted between his teeth. A white rag was bound round his head, through which a few drops of blood had oozed, leaving a dark stain. Leaning against the wall opposite was Waldron, one eye half-closed, and his lip split, giving to his face a look of savage brutality, rendered peculiarly sinister by a grim effort to smile. Costigan remained motionless, with back against the door, as though thus barring all possibility of escape. I had walked into their trap, and the jaws had closed.

The grin on Harris' face smoldered me. "Well," I said coldly, "what a stall, was it? What is the idea?"

He laughed, without changing his attitude.

"This happens to be our turn to play, Daly," he returned, apparently well satisfied with his smartness.

"Then you have nothing to tell me?"

"Oh, yes, I have; I've got a h—l of a lot to tell you. But first of all you are going to tell me a few things. Push back your right sleeve to the elbow, shirt and all."

"What's that for."

"Never you mind what it's for; you do what I say, if you know what is best for yourself."

I looked at the faces of the others, but they were hard as flint. My hesitancy caused Harris to lower his feet, and sit up angrily.

"Push up that sleeve, you, or I'll have Waldron do it for you. We've got you foul, you fool!"

I stripped back my sleeve, exposing my right forearm, yet never removing my eyes from their faces. Harris and Costigan bent forward, intent on the operation, but Waldron never shifted his position. Harris slapped a hand on the desk, and gave utterance to an oath.

"By G—d, Dan, we're right. This bird's not Daly at all."

"Not in a thousand years he ain't. He's sure a dead-ringer, though."

Harris straightened up, the same hateful grin still exposing his teeth.

"We've got your number this time, son," he announced. "Harry Daly has a tattooed anchor on his right arm. I didn't know it, but Dan did. I'll tell you what made us wise. In the shindig over at Perond's tonight, a card-case was jarred loose from your pocket. There was only one kind of card inside, and that wasn't Daly by a d—n sight. I told Dan about it, and he was for getting a squint at that right arm. Said for me to call you up at the number you gave me, believing that if I threw in 'con' enough you'd come over here. I asked for 'G 145,' the operator there named yet, and it was the same name what was on them cards. So now we know you're a dirty liar and spy, Mister Philip Severn."

"You called me Daly yourself, Harris," I said quietly, regizing the game was up, but not yet sure of their intentions. "If merely let it go."

"Sure; but what was the game? You ain't no dry-cop?"

"Nothing of the kind."

"Then you was after the dough. That's what I thought; you and the girl are in cahoots. Well, what did

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. you do with it?"

I shook my head, but this only angered Costigan.

"Ah, stow, that," he broke in roughly. "we know you never got it, but she did. There ain't no other way it could have been done. The girl left with Alva. George here saw her go out with him. Then the next morning the guy was found dead, his pockets rifled, and the bag of cash gone. How was he croaked—do you know? Punctured from behind with some sorter sharp instrument, no bigger than a hat-pin. It looked like a woman's job, but she got away clean. And what then? The next night she turns up with you over at Perond's blowing in the coin, and the two of yer havin' a h—l of a time. That's proves yer were together, don't it?"

"We're not going to blow this to the police," broke in Harris, as Dan paused for breath. "That ain't the idea at all. But we want a share of that dough. You come across, and there won't be no more trouble."

"But suppose I don't? Suppose I tell you I haven't the slightest idea where that money is, or who got it? What then?"

Harris' grin was more malicious and hateful than never, but he waited and deliberately lit his stump of a cigar.

"What "then?" he echoed finally. "Well, in the first place, we've got you, haven't we? You'll squeal, believe me, before you ever get out of our hands. See here, Severn, I ain't got any direct proof that'll put you in the chair at Sing-Sing; that's true enough, but, unless the two of you cough up liberal, I'll turn something over to the police of this town what will give you a term in the jug, as accessory, and fix that fly dame of yours for all time."

"You are bluffing; you have no such proof."

"Oh, haven't I? Look here, you fool; do you know where I got that?"

He whipped something from out the concealment of an inner coat pocket, and flung it fully revealed onto the desk—an ornamental dagger, glittering in the light, which I as instantly recognized.

"Ever see that baby weapon before?"

"Yes," and I felt a sudden relief at the discovery. "You slashed open my valise, and found it."

"Exactly; that's what I did," evidently proud of himself. "It was an easy enough trick. Just as soon as I got eyes on this pretty plaything I knew I'd got the sticker that put Alva out of business—an' I knew where it come from."

"Where?"

"Oh, h—l! do you think I ain't got any eyes? That skirt wore it in her hat when she and Alva went out together."

"Oh, did she? This same pin, was it? Say, Harris, I wish I could be as bright as you think you are. And did you happen to observe also that the lady's hat was held in place by exactly the same pin tonight when she was in Perond's? Well, it was; now how could it be in your pocket and in her hat at the same time?"

He stared at me, his mouth wide open, and I was equally amused at the expression upon the faces of the other two. I realized fully the peril I was in, and that these men would hesitate at nothing to obtain their end. Yet, in spite of all this, I was inexpressibly happy. I spiked their big gun with a single blow; moreover, I had learned the truth about her, and my faith in her innocence came back in a flood. Harris had done too much boasting; he had ruined his own case. He had placed the very weapon in my grasp which I most desired to have—absolute assurance that the girl herself was innocent. The fellow felt, and realized, the change.

"That's easy," he sneered. "She bought herself another. That proves nothing, except that she is smart enough to play safe. Neither one of you can get away on that sort of dope."

"Perhaps not; but it clears her of the murder charge."

"Oh, does it? That remains to be seen. We know who she is, and that's more than you do. Oh, h—l, I got onto that over the wire; the only thing that interested you into coming here was to learn who the dame really was. That's part of her play, as I figure it, Severn. She won't give herself away, but is just using you. When she's good and ready she means to fade, an' she'll take the dough along with her. You will have sold out for a few cheap kisses, an' that's all." He laughed coarsely. "She is stringing you for a fool. Come now, wake up, before it is too late, an' let's all get a hand in the pot; what'de yer say?"

"You still think I am that kind? One of your class?" I questioned, thoroughly angered by his sneering speech.

"One of my class? I should say not; you are the rawest kind of a mutt, but so far you've been in luck—that's all. Now your luck has changed, and yer up against it."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Blow her; tell us all you know. We'll play the game for you, and divide square."

"You will let me out of here?"

"Sure, once you give us the right steer."

"And if I refuse?"

He laughed contemptuously.

"You're not going to; you've got too d—n much sense. But just to satisfy your curiosity I'll tell you. We've got the girl spotted; we can lay our hands on her in an hour; and, believe me, we've got the goods on the young lady. Here's the sticker that did the business, and I found it right where you had hidden it away. I can find three passengers who are keeping out of sight, but I can stir them up—who'll swear that she went away alone with Alva from that factory over there; that he had the bag with him, and that the two got into the auto together. That makes one h—l of a straight case, don't it?"

"The way you put it—yes. But what good will it do you fellows to have her pinched? Where do you gain anything?"

"Time; it blocks the get-away with the swag. That's all we want. See here, Severn, we know where the stuff is planted; at least we've got an idea, but we've got to work slow and cautious in order to lift it. If it wasn't for that we wouldn't care if she skipped. If you'll help us to get quick action, we'll let the girl go, and give you a share. Take my word for it, that's a d—n sight more than you'll ever get by staying with her."

"But if she finds out that I have turned her down?"

"She won't never find it out; we'll keep mum. Besides, you're doin' her a good turn, keepin' her out of the electric chair. Well, there's the proposition—you can leave it, or take it."

Serious as the situation was, I could not fail to see its absurdity. This was no threat to frighten me; the fellows meant what they said, although I doubted if they really possessed the knowledge claimed so glibly. But they evidently meant to go on; they were not bluffing, for they really had an ugly case, and could undoubtedly make trouble. The evidence against the girl was strong, almost convincing; it even shook my own confidence in her innocence. The absurdity of the situation lay in my absolute ignorance. I knew even less than they pretended to know. What should I do? Pretend, manufacture some story? I had no faith it would work. These fellows were criminals, suspicious and unscrupulous; they would only believe what I could prove. If they caught me in a deliberate lie, as they probably would, that would instantly end everything. I might, then, just as well fight it out with them there. I set my teeth, ready for what I felt sure was coming.

"You fellows have sized me up wrong," I said quietly, but firmly. "I am not the kind to squeal because of a threat. You'll find I'll protect the lady, but I'll do it in my own way—not yours. The honest truth is, I haven't anything to tell. You won't believe that, but it is so. I know less than you claim to know; I have no knowledge of where the money is, or who got it. I do not know who killed Alva; even now I haven't any suspicions worth mentioning. But I will say this plainly—I do not believe this girl did it, or that she had any hand in the robbery. I am going to stay with her till h—l freezes over, if that is what you want to know. That's my answer, Harris, and it is all I've got to give you."

"You d—d cur! we'll show you something!"

"Perhaps you will; you are three to one, and on your own dung-hill. But the man who touches me is going to get hurt; I'll promise you that. No, you don't, Costigan; that trick won't work!"

I tried to keep my eyes on the three of them, but his movement caused me to step back closer against the door. I feared the Jew least; he had neither spoken nor moved since our entrance, and I felt he had no stomach for any farther fighting. Yet I judged wrong. With one quick dash forward he gripped my wrist as I reached back for a revolver, and flung his burly frame against me with such force as to have thrown me headlong but for the support of the wall. Before I could wrench myself free, the others closed in desperately, content to use their hands, unwilling, perhaps, to create any alarm with fire-arms. I was a better fighting man than any one of the three, but combined they had the advantage. I overwhelmed Fred from the Russian, and thus got one hand in action, yet that was all. I knew I planted one jolting blow straight against Costigan's round face which made him wince, and got a foot fair into Harris' stomach, sending him reeling backward. Indeed I staggered the two of them, twisting out of the grip of those iron fingers, and smashing a step forward in spite of every effort. I was maddened, frenzied, reckless of all injury, eager only to injure those devils in any conceivable way; hate seemed to endow me with supernatural strength, and a desire to kill swept me with passion. All before me was blood-red, amid which swam their faces, and I went straight for them like a wild beast. Then, suddenly, from behind, a blow descended on my head, crushing me to the floor. I went stumbling down as though struck with a pole-ax, and lay motionless. For the instant I must have retained a measure of consciousness. I knew where I was; I even attempted vainly to gain use of my limbs, and I heard Harris swear in disgust.

"What the h—l did you hit him like that for, you idiot?" he yelped. "We don't want to kill the guy; he's worth more to us alive. Here, you, Waldron, lift a hand to help!"

Then all knowledge left me, and I went out into the dark.

CHAPTER XI

A Venture of Peril.

I must have remained unconscious for an hour or more. I never really knew how long, for my watch disappeared, yet it was still night when I again painfully opened my eyes and endeavored to perceive my surroundings. Memory of the blow which ended the struggle caused me to lift a hand to my head; the scalp was bruised and broken, the hair matted with clotted blood, yet I could not believe the injury was a serious one. I could use my limbs. Satisfied on this point, and assured that I was alone, I braced myself on one arm, and, in a sitting posture, endeavored to survey my shroundings.

I was resting on the floor of a bare room of ordinary size, containing no vestige of furniture. The place was cold, with that indescribable chill peculiar to unused apartments, and through the one window, which was unshaded by a curtain, poured the direct light of an almost full moon. In this silvery light every bit of that interior stood revealed in its hideous bareness, the roughly finished walls, the patches of plaster fallen off, the dirty floor, the single door and window, the rags amid which I rested. It was a hopeless scene.

I staggered to my feet reeling a moment like a drunken man, and then carefully found my way along the side wall to the window. My strength increased as I advanced, and courage was born with it—I was not dead; I might buffle those villains yet. They must have felt that I was safe enough in this place; that, even if I regained consciousness, no escape was possible, for they had left no guard. A glance without revealed the reason for such confidence. I was four stories up, a sheer brick wall below, and, at the bottom, a concrete walk. There was nothing between to cling to unless it might be the narrow coping of stone just beneath the window sill. I stared at this, almost hopefully, for an instant; then turned my eyes away with a shudder; it was scarcely as broad as the sole of my shoe and to think of creeping along there was merely the dream of a madman. The bright moonlight flooded everything about, yet I saw nothing familiar; I was evidently at the back end of a house, with others closely set on either side, and an alley beyond a small, enclosed yard. This latter was littered with dead weeds and rubbish of every description, and a small shed of some kind extended across the rear. Three stories below, but to the right, a narrow porch protected the back door. There was no movement visible anywhere, no gleam of light from the windows below me. I listened in vain for any sound; the night was as still as death, not even the echo of a distant street-car reaching my ear. I was somewhere within the limits of the city; of that I felt assured, but beyond this could determine nothing.

Tight-Rope Thrills.

Miss Eleanora, an English tight-rope walker, has announced her intention of crossing Niagara Falls on a tight-rope, early in June. Should she succeed she will not be the first to accomplish this perilous feat.

It was in 1859 that Blondin announced his determination to cross Niagara Falls on a tight-rope, and world-wide interest was aroused. The rope was stretched over the falls nearly 250 feet above the rapids, and Blondin walked across, carrying a long balancing pole. Not content with this, he decided to take a passenger over on his back, and his manager, a Mr. Calcourt, volunteered, and was safely carried over.

During the next few years there were quite a number of people who copied Blondin's feats. One man rode across on a bicycle, and a Scotsman named McDonnell successfully performed the hazardous feat of walking to the centre of the rope and standing on his head for a short time before continuing his journey.

Perhaps the most sensational feat in the history of Niagara Falls was performed by Signora Spinelli, who successfully crossed with bundles of kets on her feet in place of the tight-rope walker's shoes!

BOOMING BETTER SIRES

Publicity Methods Used in Forwarding the Campaign.

Motion Pictures the "Reel Thing"—Lantern Slides Also Useful—The Use of Gate Signs is Becoming Popular With Breeders — Can't Have Eggs and Mites, too.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The ultimate object of the campaign for better sires is to improve the quality of the beef and dairy herds of the country. To achieve the object it is necessary, first, to create in the minds of farmers an interest in and a desire for a better class of cattle. This cannot be done by writing and talking alone. The ideal way to create this interest would be to have the people see numbers of good cattle. As this is seldom practicable, the next best thing is the use of good pictures. It is in this direction that we have found motion pictures useful. If you can show an audience a number of reels of high class cattle, you secure their interest immediately, and when shown in pastures similar to the pastures in their own fields the appeal is very strong. Wherever such pictures have been shown, it has resulted in a number of the audience making enquiry about breeding, feeding and methods of caring for cattle to obtain the best results.

Motion Pictures Have Their Limitations.

Motion pictures are not well adapted for making studies of type. It is in this connection that we have found lantern slides valuable. The slides we have used have included close-up pictures of ideal representatives of all breeds contrasted with slides of undesirable and unprofitable types. One of the most interesting is a series showing a number of scrub cows, the good bulls to which they were bred and the resulting calves. This is the next best thing to having the animals actually there. In brief, motion pictures secure the attention of the audience and create a desire for more information; lantern slides illustrate types and methods. Motion pictures made on Ontario farms have been used to illustrate the leading beef and dairy breeds. Wherever possible, groups of animals by one sire are included to show uniformity and high standard of breed type.

It is proposed to prepare a picture of market animals showing different grades. Some examples of grade cows of poor to fair quality with their calves by high class bulls, showing marked improvement in one generation by the use of a good sire, have been secured. It is hoped to secure more of these as they are the very best of object lessons.

The Use of Gate Signs.

In an educational campaign there are a number of essentials, one of which is to create an interest in the minds of those you wish to influence. It is not an easy matter to reach the man who must requires instruction. Bulletins and other literature sent to him often find their way into the waste basket unread. He is not easy to get out to meetings where the matter is to be discussed. The main object in using these signs is to reach the man who does not read bulletins or attend meetings. When he sees a sign on his neighbor's gate announcing the fact that a pure-bred bull is kept on that farm, it starts him thinking. If every farm where a pure-bred bull is kept is indicated in this way, natural curiosity will as a rule lead a man to make inquiries. Such an individual will probably have been claiming that his grade bull is just as good as the pure-bred, but he soon realizes that if he keeps a bull and has no sign up stating that it is pure-bred, the inference is that it is inferior.

The spirit of "Keeping up with the Joneses," while it may in some cases cause discomfort, is a real factor in human progress. When you get a man in a receptive frame of mind, you have accomplished considerable; in other words, you have fertile soil. The mission of the gate sign is to create interest, and in this it is succeeding in a great measure.

—J. E. Reitze, Assist. Live Stock Director, Toronto.

Can't Have Eggs and Mites, Too.

Hot weather brings the roost mites. They multiply so fast that the hen-house is swarming with them and the egg yield has dropped to almost nothing, perhaps, before you realize what is the cause. Therefore, don't wait for them. Make the house disagreeable to these pests before they show themselves. The process of keeping out the mites is one of the simplest in poultry culture. Kerosene will do it. It is easily applied, either by a broad flat paint brush or a spray. The paint brush will save kerosene, but takes time. The spray will save time and use kerosene. Take your choice, but paint or spray the roost and supports with kerosene before the mites put in an appearance. The morning is the best time, as the roosts will be dry and much of the odor from the oil will have disappeared before the hens return at night. Spray or paint every two weeks during warm weather. A good-sized egg check every month keeps the hall rolling. Don't let the mites get it.

The New Farm House and Trees.

When planning to build a farm house it is well to select a location near good trees, so that their shade may be used and enjoyed by the family every day during the summer. It takes so long to grow good trees that existing ones should be cherished and utilized to the fullest extent. If trees must be planted they should not be placed directly in front of the farm house, but should be put somewhat to each side so as to make a frame through which a view of a portion of the front is obtained.

Docking of Lambs.

Farmers who are engaged in the sheep industry often forget to dock and castrate their lambs. Live stock commission men and packers are staunch supporters of castration and docking of lambs for market purposes and get more for animals which have received this attention.

Lambs that have not been docked present a poor appearance when marketed, but the main reason for docking is that lambs on summer pasture often scour. Such conditions invite the blow-fly and maggots and often the lamb is lost.

BEE DISEASE FEARED

STEPS ARE BEING TAKEN TO PROTECT INDUSTRY.

Meeting Was Held Recently In Washington to Discuss Danger of "Isle of Wight" Disease, and Apiarists From Canada Were Present to Help In the Necessary Campaign.

Serious ravages, causing almost complete destruction of the beekeeping industry in parts of Europe by the "Isle of Wight" disease, has started determined action by beekeepers and bee inspectors to save their business from similar losses. This far the disease has not gained a foothold in this country or in the United States, and it is believed that should the disease become established here, beekeepers, queen breeders, and manufacturers of bee supplies would quickly be ruined, and horticultural interests would be seriously damaged.

As a step toward preventing this, a meeting was held recently at the Bureau of Entomology of the United States' Department of Agriculture, which was attended by specialists from several States and Canada, who are interested in protective measures. Among those present were Dr. C. L. Howard, chief of the Bureau of Entomology; Dr. C. L. Marlatt, chairman of the U. S. Horticultural Board; Dr. E. F. Phillips, U. S. Agriculturist; Prof. F. E. Millen, Provincial Apiarist for Ontario; Prof. Geo. H. Rea, Pennsylvania State College; R. G. Carr, apiary inspector of New Jersey; J. G. Sanders, Harrisburg, Pa., president of the American Association of Economic Entomologists; Prof. E. Phillips, Massachusetts Agricultural College; and Dr. H. E. Ewing, expert on mites, Bureau of Entomology.

The meeting decided to use all feasible efforts to prevent the introduction of queen bees from all foreign countries, and to discourage the introduction of adult bees into the United States, except for experimental and scientific purposes by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. There is also known Isle of Wight disease in Canada, and since it is hoped and expected that the Dominion of Canada will establish the same safeguards to the beekeeping industry, it was planned not to establish any prohibitions against shipments of bees between Canada and the United States.

All the men who attended the meeting were of the opinion that the Isle of Wight disease would be such a serious menace to beekeeping on this continent, that every possible step should be taken to prevent its introduction. All importation of queen bees should be stopped, they believed. The conferees expressed the hope that beekeepers in both countries would co-operate to the fullest extent by making no attempt to introduce adult bees. Any queen breeder who introduced this disease into the country would be doing a great damage to the beekeeping industry that would be a serious drawback to future business, it was said.

Isle of Wight disease is caused by a parasite mite in adult bees, and is easily transported by bees shipped from Europe to America, as was proved during last summer, when live bees carrying living mites arrived in Washington from Scotland. The disease is evidently a serious source of loss to beekeepers of the British Isles. It was first observed in 1904 in the Isle of Wight, whence came the name, and in succeeding years it has spread with considerable rapidity to all parts of Great Britain. In England the disease has been called acarine disease, from the order name (Acarina) of the mite that causes it.

New Field Crops.

Co-operative experiments in farm crop production held under the auspices of the Experimental Union, and directed from the Field Husbandry Department of the Ontario Agricultural College, are the source of great interest to a large and growing number of Ontario farmers yearly. Any person in Ontario who grows field crops may apply for any one of the experiments arranged by the department, and a second choice is allowed so that the applicant will not be entirely disappointed if material for the first choice experiment has been exhausted before his application is received.

Thirty-five different experiments are listed for the 1922 crop season. These include not only the well-known classes of farm crops, but also new introductions which have been tested at the College, but which are as yet little known throughout Ontario, such as Hubam Sweet Clover, Sudan Grass, Soy Beans, Hairy Vetches, Mangold or Cow Cabbage, Grimm Alfalfa, Rough Buckwheat, Sugar Mangels, Gold Nugget Corn and Fodder Sunflowers.

Prepare Land for Alfalfa.

Fall seeding of alfalfa requires moisture and a soil which is well packed. One of the best ways of getting such a condition is to disk the ground as soon as oats or small grain is taken off, then plough it and pack it thoroughly by harrowing it or rolling. Soil which has been in a well-fertilized crop and removed early, such as early potatoes, makes good ground for fall seeding. On ground of this kind a thorough disking and harrowing will often put it in good shape for alfalfa. On many of our types of soil alfalfa will do better if limestone is applied. This limestone should be applied after the ground has been ploughed and then harrowed in to give best results.

What Is a "New" Star?

Dr. Harlow Shapley, writing of novae and variable stars, points out that at least two objects appear to be entitled to the name "new star" in a literal sense. These are stars which have increased in brightness from the unknown and do not fade away. One of them, R.S. Serpentis, has been of magnitude 11 for the last seven years, first appearing in 1909 as a star of magnitude 14. The other is 27, 1920, which, according to Wolf, appeared in 1908, and had reached the 11th magnitude in 1920. Eventually these two stars may fade away, or they may be stars slowly emerging from behind obscuring clouds, rather than objects newly born. Up to the present time, however, the name "new star" is more appropriate for them than for ordinary "novae," so called.

The Roman catacombs are 550 miles in extent, and it is estimated that something like 15,000,000 dead are interred there.

CATTLE DISEASE.

Health Is First Essential In Dairy Herd Efficiency.

The importance to humans of the eradiction of bovine tuberculosis from dairy herds was emphasized in an address delivered recently before Edmonton, Alta., dairymen by Dr. George Hilton, Chief Veterinary Inspector for the Dominion. He showed how stubborn how insidious, and how aggressive the disease is. If, said he, bovine tuberculosis could be altogether eradicated, it would not only be practically eliminated from hogs and other farm animals, but also be lessened to a great degree in human beings. It is by far the most important disease of the cow, chiefly because of its wide prevalence and the ease with which in some forms the germs of the disease find access to the milk, and may in this way be transmitted to man. Unfortunately it also has to produce spectacular symptoms; but, on the contrary, is a private insidious, chronic and progresses slowly. Often it can only be revealed by test.

Happily the work carried on by officers of the Health of Animals branch of the Department of Agriculture and by the Provincial authorities belongs, is doing a great deal in safeguarding the public, thus contributing to the health of children and increasing the efficiency of men and women. Dairymen are vitally interested because on the health of their herds depends the flow of milk and consequently their individual profits.

The man who supplies clean, wholesome milk is rendering a public service. There are three essentials to herd efficiency and profit: 1st, maintenance of health; 2nd, maximum milk production, and, 3rd, a good yearly crop of calves. To secure these things records must be kept, keen watchfulness observed, and tests applied. There is no doubt, Dr. Hilton concluded, that by eradicating tuberculosis in cattle an important part is played in stamping out the great white plague—consumption.

Forage Plans.

Western rye grass, which in large sections of the West has an importance comparable to that of timothy in the East, has been more thoroughly experimented with then any other grass under investigation by the Division of Forage Plants of the Dominion Astrologist, Dr. M. O. Molthe. The discovery made that this grass is self-fertilized is of considerable importance and interest. This fact, as in the case of wheat, makes the easy development of countless varieties possible. In making tests of numerous varieties now growing wild in Canada, variations in the quantity of straw and seed produced were found to exist to a surprising degree. As these varieties are found to breed true to type, it should not be difficult to propagate selections from these or from new originations, with a probability of securing varieties of far greater productiveness than those now being grown.

Other grasses under test included six samples of orchard grass received from Sweden and 29 individual plants from Vancouver, B.C.; meadow fescue, including a lot received from Sweden; a small area of Sudan grass, and a few lots of miscellaneous grasses, including awnless Brome grass, Red Top, Red fescue, and Tall oat grass. Thirteen full-page plates showing roots of representative varieties of mangels tested in 1920, and three of varieties of field carrots also tested in 1920, constitute a feature of the Departmental report, which may be obtained free on application to the Publications Branch at Ottawa.

Mineral in Clover and Alfalfa.

Meavy milking cows require more mineral matter than is provided in some rations. It has been pointed out by experiment stations that the addition of mineral matter to rations is beneficial, especially to the cow that produces a large flow of milk. We haven't, as yet, definite information on the use of mineral matter, its relations or just what kind and how much is the best to feed a cow.

Dr. E. B. Hart, of the Wisconsin Experiment Station says: "Lime the soil and grow those classes of forage crops which are rich in calcium, such as clovers and alfalfa." He has found that rations low in calcium produce weak offspring, but he considers that producing the calcium in the crops is a better way of supplying the mineral with this element than to purchase it in the market.

The time may come when mineral matter can be purchased that will serve quite as well as that produced in the crops, but under our present knowledge it is better to grow the mineral matter in our crops as clover and alfalfa.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Venus of Milo.

Just 100 years ago the French Government came into possession of the Venus of Milo for the modest sum of 1,000 francs. A young middleman named Voutier was exploring the island of Milo when he noticed a peasant working with a pickax at some object in the ground. He found that it was a statue, in three pieces, and was astonished at its unusual beauty. A Greek monk prevented him from buying the statue at once, but Voutier appealed to the French ambassador at Constantinople, who went to the Sultan and induced him to sell for a trifle what is now considered the foremost work of art in the world.

A Life for A Dollar

NEVER was human life so cheap as it can be bought today in the famine districts of Russia.

$1 will save a child's life by providing food for a month.

$10 will save ten children from starvation.

$600 will establish a kitchen and feed 100 children until the next harvest.

Will you save a life with a dollar?

Could any other dollar you have—or ever hope to have—bring such soul-satisfying returns?

Wouldn't you sleep better—feel better—be better—if you knew that a dollar of yours saved a child's life?

Only—anything you do to save the children of Russia in their desperate fight against death from starvation, must be done at once. Won't you send the dollar NOW? A child's life depends on it.

Cheques and money orders may be forwarded through your bank or local committee or sent direct to Sir George Burn, Treasurer, Save the Children Fund, Elgin Bldg., Ottawa.

DUNLOP
CORD TIRES FABRIC

Making "Mile-ionaires"

THESE are great days for the motor car user—In a tire sense. Your dollar never before bought as much. Your speedometer never before registered as much. Your repair kit never was as idle. All because Dunlop Cord Tires came and ushered in a new era. Five years ago you paid half as much again for the same size tire; ten years ago you paid twice as much. Prices have been tumbling. Quality has been mounting. One time we thought 3,500 was mileage to boast of; to-day we may run into half a dozen "25,000 milers" in a forenoon. "Dunlop did it," says one enthusiast. "The 'Two Hands' are making us Mile-ionaires," says another; and so on.

The sign "Mileage Wanted" is now changed to "Mileage Supplied."

IN DANCE FROCKS

Constant Demand for the Decorative Little Gowns.

Paris Has Run on Orchid and Petunia Tints—Dazzling Colors Have Prominence.

On the Riviera—as elsewhere—writes a Paris fashion correspondent, frocks are in constant demand, decorative little gowns suitable for dance teas, and more elaborate, but not really very different, toilettes for the evening.

And just here I must pause a second to point out that it becomes more and more the fashion to wear frocks at dance teas, which the girls of a few years ago would have considered sufficiently gorgeous for evening use.

Paquin's latest dance frock is a delicious girlish affair, expressed in petunia-colored lace and charmeuse, with clusters of black waxed flowers trailing carelessly down the front.

The manner in which simple draperies were arranged was the important thing. The uneven hem, which is still at the height of its popularity, was in evidence, and the long-waisted effect was varied by the introduction of a drapery which crossed the figure

This dress was absolutely sleeveless and the corsage was guiltless of trimming.

This particular style had taken root. One sees it exploited in the very best showrooms. In fact, a trimmed corsage would look old-fashioned nowadays.

There is a run on the orchid and petunia tints. Certain famous dressmakers are trying to make very brilliant, almost crude colors fashionable, but the majority of the exclusive women prefer the subtle shades of puce-pink, petunia, blue, lemon yellow and so on. I have lately seen some wonderful yellow tints which had more than a dash of pink in their composition, and a certain pale blue which looks heliotrope under a strong light.

FASHION NOTES OF INTEREST

Lightweight wool jersey cloth continues to be popular in utility frocks for children.

Hat pins have pendants of jade or pearl. Also milady may have hat pins and earrings to match.

Informal evening frocks for summer promise to be sparkling affairs of crepe decorated with beads.

Appliqued motifs and heavy embroideries continue to be the popular trimmings for silk, cotton and wool fabric dresses for children.

White and black and high shades share honors for spring and summer, those of the sport type leaning decidedly to the bright colors. Gowns will be exceedingly popular, and there are a number of vivid reds.

While the straight-line chemise type of dress continues a favorite, there are also many that feature a waistline. The very low waistline is most frequently seen, but the frock that is gathered or belted in at or near the normal waistline is not at all unusual.

White gowns of a more formal type heavily trimmed in crystals seem to be popular and are made along straight lines with perhaps some slight draping at one hip which is caught with an ornament finished in a long spray of flowers. Many of these dresses have trains.

Smart Spring Wardrobe.

A smart spring wardrobe should include a cape dress, and for the early days of the season krimmer is suggested for trimming, according to the Designer. Black kasha cloth with a cape lined with colored crepe de chine is smart, or omitting the krimmer, it can be made entirely of crepe de chine, crepe faille, satin, taffeta or broadcloth, duvetyn, tricotine, cheviot or jersey. Inserted side sections give the effect of a paneled skirt. Lower edge about two yards.

Gingham Checks in Silk.

Taffeta dresses in small gingham checks are trimmed in ruffles of valenciennes lace, and in those the brown and white check with the tinted ecru valenciennes is well liked. Inset embroidered squares of batiste are used in many of these taffetas for dress wear and for the party frocks pastel shades are used. These are trimmed in laces and embroideries of all kinds and many of them have the most novel sleeve treatments, sometimes just the merest suggestion of a sleeve.

AFTER GRIP

Colds, Fevers or a Rundown Condition, Take This Advice

Pleasantville, N. S.—"Four years ago I was a very sick woman. The doctor said it was pneumonia. It kept me in bed for five weeks and left me so weak that I could hardly get about. A dear friend advised me to try Dr. Pierce's remedies and I did so. After taking a bottle of his Golden Medical Discovery and one of the Favorite Prescription I found I was getting so much stronger that I continued using them, according with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, until I fully recovered my strength."—Mrs. Agnes Brunell.

TO STENCIL THE HOME WALLS

Process Is Simple and Adds Dignity and Charm to the Different Rooms.

The process of treating walls at the present time is rather a simple proposition. In the years gone by, in the better homes, it has been considered good taste to use decorative effects in the way of elaborate stencils, free hand work, or highly figured papers, where paper was used. At the present time simplicity has been considered good taste. Some people prefer a simple stencil put on with some contrasting yet harmonizing color in the way of a frieze.

Stenciling the Walls.

In using water color on walls, the side wall can be run up to the ceiling tight and the ceiling painted with some other color to give contrast, or the color used on the ceiling may be brought down on the side wall to the picture molding. This space between the picture molding and the ceiling can be left plain or a nice stencil design used.

While a practical painter and decorator can always do better work than an amateur, the process of stencilling walls is so simple that a great deal of this work is done by the property owners themselves.

EVENING GOWNS OF COLORS

Apparel for Formal Wear Developed in Purple and Gold and Red and Silver.

Magnificent gowns for the evening are developed in purple and gold and of gold and silver, notes a Paris fashion writer. In a model of this sort gold lace is used for a long, rather long fitting bodice and straight skirt. The bodice has a high collar in the back and is cut in a long slender V in front. There are half-sleeves of gold lace. They extend from the elbows to the wrists, being suspended from the shoulders by jeweled straps. From beneath the bejeweled bands a full tunic of purple tulle. It is cut circular at the sides, so that a flaring ripple is produced, and as the tunic is much longer at the sides, it falls in cascades which end in two graceful trains. Even more color is introduced through a huge corsage bouquet of sweet peas in dozens of purple and red tones.

Among the wide-skirted evening models of which Lelong is making many, is one of white taffeta in combination with silver lace and silver cloth. This frock has a necklace of silver roses. A garland of the same flowers trails down the left side of the skirt.

Esperanto, the only one of all the so-called universal languages that shows any sign of survival, was invented by Dr. Dumenhof during fifteen years' captivity in a Polish prison.

Electric Signs In Churches.

Churches are making use of electric signs and are also using colored lights to make the services more impressive and are using flood light to display the beauties of the stained glass windows.

The earliest designs used for China at Worcester, E., are believed to have been copied from the Chinese.

Drill Sergeants of the Sky.

One thing must impress you as you watch a cloud of birds in flight, and that is the amazing way in which the whole flock turns, wheels, soars, or descends, as if by some common impulse.

Such a thing as a collision never occurs. Do they act upon a system of signals given by the leader of the flock, or have they some mysterious means of communicating drill commands? Certainly every bird is capable of becoming the leader, for the one which is for the moment at the head of the flock is followed by the rest whatever his movements may be.

We find much the same kind of drill used by animals which live in herds. But here there is a difference, for the herd has always an acknowledged leader whose place is at its head. The old stallion who commands a herd of wild horses snorts to indicate danger, and gives a short sharp neigh to command flight. If his followers are attacked, he rallies them with a long shrill neigh, and when he wants the herd to stand and fight its pursuers he gives the signal with a squeal

Billions Are Lost Yearly.

There is a tremendous supply of helium in Canada. Probably no other country is as rich in this gas.

People are in the habit of thinking that helium is very valuable in wartime. It was regarded as the best kind of lighter-than-air gas to use in balloons because it will not burn or explode.

But helium is a precious natural possession for which some use must be found in peace times.

It has been estimated that at wartime prices, Canada is wasting $50,000,000 worth of helium every day of the year. It is found in our natural gas, and escapes unused into the air.

Here is enough money being lost to wipe off our national debt if our scientists could only find another use for helium. The problem faces the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research at Ottawa.

See them in our Show-Rooms.

The June bride in quest of a "going-away" Suit, or anyone who likes the best, will surely find these garments most attractive from every view-point.

Their very "cut" emphasizes their right to be termed "exclusive."

Their trimmings, so unique and so becomingly applied, bespeaks the very best in "Good-Taste."

The linings, the findings, the hidden parts of each suit, the smaller details which are so apt to be overlooked, are the very finest obtainable.

One Suit in the group is a three-piece, the rest are two-piece. One number is beautifully embroidered with French knots which just seem to supply the necessary dash of color. Another Suit is ornamented with a wide ribbon girdle. Semi-tailored effects prevail in the other Suits. Our quantity is limited, but each Suit is wonderfully good. A Suit that you will be glad to wear.

Other Suits are priced $39.50, $29.50, and $20.00.

To every Little Girl—

Ask your Mother, or your big sister, if she knows Warner Corsets—Ask her to find out how good they are, and during the week of May 19th to May 24th

if she wants a new corset tell her to see the Warner Rust-Proof Models that we are showing.

For if she likes them, as we know she will, and buys one for herself—we'll have a little Warner Corset to give her for your Dolly.

We have Warner Corsets in Stock.

All Sizes. Several Styles.

OUR POLICY ON PRICE

Let us start with the frank admission that our main purpose in business is to continue to operate this big successful store.

There is one curious thing about the retail business. To be successful, a store must lead in something.

Some lead in an atmosphere of elegance.

Some effect a staid conservatism which is attractive to so many people of means.

Our aim has always been to lead in giving a little more, and better merchandise for a dollar, than anyone else.

That is not mean that we are the sort of a store where odds and ends, and rejected or damaged goods, are offered at ridiculous prices.

To avoid any suggestion of that, we have always specialized on the highest conceivable standards—on such standards as are expressed in Fit-Reform Clothing for men, Borsalino Hats, Boanett's French Silks, Horrockses' Cottons, Old Bleach Linens, John Brown's famous Madras, Nemo Corsets, and many other equally as famous brands.

Our price policy is based on the simplest and most fundamental law in business, namely: A concern which makes a great many sales can afford to take a smaller profit per sale than one which makes only a few sales.

The fact that our store is usually pretty well filled with customers is your best assurance of getting good value.

Especially in these times of economical buying.

Our business grows rapidly because each year more people learn that the exchange value of a dollar is higher in our store than in other stores.

We shall maintain that leadership.
